NUMBER NINE.

Capt. Alfred Ayleward Denies He is an Invincible.

The Lieutenant of the Famous Boer Commander Interviewed--Ireland's Quarrel.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, March 17.—Capt. Alfred Ayleward, the Irish Lieutenant of Gen. Joubert, the Boer leader in the recent war in the Transvaal, is very indignant about a dispatch from Denver published here. The dispatch announced that Mr. Stuart Downing, the American correspondent of the London Standard, had arrived at Denver in course of a search for the mysterious "No. 1," who, he claimed, was none other than "Capt. Ayleward, the Irish refugee." To a reporter Capt. Ayleward said:

"I am in no sense a refugee, inasmuch as I was living publicly in London writing for the Pall Mall Gazette, the Fortnightly Review and Fraser's Magazine from December, 1881, to June, 1882, and during that time took no part in Irish politics, nor have I taken any active part in Irish affairs since my arrival here last July. The original "I. R. B." or Irish Republican Brotherhood, to which I belong, gave me a number, to be sure, but it was No. 9, not No. 1. This body severely and similar methods, and it is well-known of me individually that I incurred the hostility of a new section that arose in 1868, because of my adherence to the original body and its aims and methods. Were I 'No. 1,' the Phœnix Park catastrophe would certainly not have occurred, although perhaps the British Empire might have felt force applied in some more effective way."

"Can you imagine any motive on the part of the correspondent for the accusation?" asked the reporter.

"The Standard has, by its correspondence and in its leading columns, hounded me down with false accusations ever since. On the 20th day of February, 1881, I prevented Cameron, its war correspondent, from continuing the course of insult, threatening and 'pumping' he tried on with Gen. Joubert and staff at the foot of Long's Neck Slope, when he came to inquire why the British had met with a disaster at Majuba. In my opinion, however, it is a safe certificate of good character to be belittled and abused by the vilest Tory organ of the British press."

"Where were you at the time of the Phœnix Park murders?"

"My address in London was 63 Grosvenor road, Pimlico. On the night of the assassinations I was at Cowells', a well-known resort in Holborn, with a number of other nationalist frequenters of the place. When we heard the news of the tragedy we were all more surprised and shocked than words can tell. Frank Byrne, whose extradition from France was asked by the Government the other day, was present on the occasion and refused to give the report credence."

"What do you think of the alleged statement of Mr. Downing that a friend of yours in this city has offered to betray you for $5,000?"

"I don't know who my kind friend is, but I am disposed to

UNDERBID HIM.

I will return to London at once willingly for half the amount demanded by my friend."

"You have not much faith in the efficacy of Mr. Gladstone's measures for improving Ireland?"

"Really patriotic Irishmen reject all English panaceas for Irish troubles. Remedial measures are impertinent to a people who demand only independence. Some well-meaning persons profess to be more shocked at the killing of Burke and Cavendish because, as they say, the latter was the bearer of a 'message of peace' to Ireland than if he had been merely an English official. His 'message of peace' and the idea that he could be there on such a thing, not in the character of a herald, but as one of the dominant foreign ruling factions, is to the mind of logical Irishmen an intensification of outrage and not a step toward pacification. Ireland's quarrel with England is irreconcilable except on the condition of England's withdrawal from Ireland.

IF PARNELL SUCCEEDS

in restoring all the land of Ireland to the peasantry the men who have national sentiment to vindicate and years of outrage and wrong to avenge will not be satisfied until England, stricken in her tenderest interests, 'those connected with her pocket,' will admit herself vanquished in the attempt to rule Ireland by any method."

A BIG BROTHER

Compels a Truant Lover to Marry His Pretty Sister.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, March 17.—The quiet and romantic Sleepy Hollow, made romantic by the pen of Irving, has been disturbed by the most sensational romance of a forced marriage at midnight. A young couple standing high in society and bearing old and well-established names, who had been keeping company for several years, had loved not wisely but too well. The lover had allowed his attentions to be attracted elsewhere, and on various excuses had made several postponements of the wedding-day until the "big brother" of the young lady took the matter in hand. Arming himself with necessary documents provided by the new code, and accompanied by a police officer, he visited the house of the gay deceiver after midnight, taking the same road and crossing the bridge described in the legend of the "Headless Horseman." The young man was highly indignant at the impertinence of his visitors, but was finally persuaded to make his toilet and accompany the officers back to the village. The party proceeded to the Police Court, where they found the venerable Justice, and in question waiting for the performance of a marriage ceremony. Again the groom hesitated, when he realized the import of the proceedings, but when the warrant for his arrest and sections from the new code pertaining to his case had been read to him, he, with all the ill grace possible to assume, accepted the situation, and the ceremony, which was particularly noticeable for its solemnity, proceeded. Few guests were present, and the reception was not extensive. The groom was not in full dress owing to a portion being forgotten in his hasty toilet, and the bride was in traveling costume. After the ceremony the groom turned his back on his newly made wife, disowning her in toto and swearing vengeance on all concerned. A suit to obtain support for the wife will be in order. The husband, who is a man of considerable property, threatens to contest the legality of his forced marriage.

NOT A NUN.

The Manner in Which Stephanie Gantz Earned Her Living.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, March 17.—Attired in the costume of a German nun, a woman calling herself Stephanie Gantz, was taken to the Essex Market Court by Officer Henry Schmenk, of the Seventeenth Precinct, who, with many residents of the east side, was under the impression that she was a veritable sister of charity. She is a woman fifty-two years of age, and was dressed in black and a small crape bonnet with a black crape veil. Under her black shawl she carried a very large and expensive crucifix, which she used with a great show of reverence. Her arrest was brought about by the Father attached to the Church of the Most Holy Redeemer, in Third street. In court she carried a small book, which she held with both hands; a pair of black gloves encased her hands. Altogether she appeared to be a person well calculated to deceive. "For two years past this woman has gone about the ward collecting from the poorer people small sums of money under the representation that she was a Sister of Charity," said the officer. "You have no right to go about in that garb," said the Justice. The woman told a long story in German, to the effect that she was without means, and if people were pleased to give her money they could do so.

"How much money do you make this way?" asked the Justice.

"Just enough to live by," she answered.

"She was at one time a nun in Germany," said the officer. "She came away with a man to this country, who afterwards abandoned her. She is a very fair needlewoman, and earned her own living for some time. She speaks Latin and a number of modern languages. She is too lazy to do any work, and begs [illegible]

"I will let you go this [illegible] rested again I will send [illegible] grant," said the Justice [illegible]

ST. PATRICK.

Irish Citizens Duly Honoring the Memory of Their Great Patron.

Pontifical High Mass at St. Patrick's Church --The Grand Parade--Programme of the Knights' Banquet

This is St. Patrick's Day. If anybody doubts it, all he need do is fling an ear to the breeze and listen to the strains of "Rory O'More" and "Paudheen O'Rafferty," that come one very breath blown from the north end of the city. The day is being celebrated with music, from reed and brass, by societies in bright regalia, with flying banners and flower-wreathed marshals on horseback, and the night will be made merry and to a certain degree memorable by the plumed members of the local Irish aristocracy, who will sit at the banquet table in the Southern Hotel and hearken to their own eloquence while they make the feast-hall ring with the melodies of Moore and resound with "Slainthe gal ma cruiskeens" until midnight has melted into morning. This embraces the civic celebration, which is participated in by Irish and Irish-American citizens generally. Flags are flying from public buildings, everybody is wearing either a sprig of shamrock or a bit of green ribbon, and the picturesque high hats that rest upon the heads of the gentlemen are a holiday adornment in the way of dress that old Teufelsdrockh would shed tears of joy over. The central point for all the enthusiasm and patriotism that the festival calls for a display of is St. Patrick's Church, where the religious character of the day was appropriately honored by a pontifical high mass offered up at 9 o'clock in the morning by Bishop Ryan, assisted by Fathers Hayes and Foley. The church was beautifully decorated, and there was fine music by a select choir, under the direction of William Ohm, organist. Rev. Father Daly, of Sts. Mary and Joseph's Church, Carondelet, preached the panegyric of St. Patrick, and his eloquent effort was attentively listened to by the vast congregation that filled the edifice. A large number of the local clergy were present in the sanctuary during mass, and many remained in the parsonage for the procession to pass in the afternoon.

The ceremonies at St. Patrick's Church were the great feature of the morning. The parade was the attraction for the afternoon. The published call of Grand Marshal Bree named 12 o'clock as the time for the assembling of the divisions and societies at the place of rendezvous on Cass avenue, and 1 o'clock was the hour set for starting the procession. The marshals, however, were a little late in getting their men into line, and it was almost 2 o'clock when all the societies were on the ground and the start made. Then the bands began playing and the procession moved along the appointed line of March in the following order:

Sergeant Floreich and sixteen mounted police.

Grand Marshal Bree and his aids, all mounted; Ex-Grand Marshal Henry Coughlin; Thomas Fitzpatrick, Patrick Brennan, James L. Dawson, J. E. O'Connor, Chas. Irwin, James Maher, Peter O'Brien, Charles Landers, James Garrigan, John McCarthy, John Sullivan, John Finan, Thomas McNamara, Wm. Cullinane, James Hardy, John Sheehan, F. X. McCabe and John Carroll.

Wolfe Tone Rifles, thirty men, commanded by James Meegan.

Knights of Father Mathew, forty men, D. O'Connell Tracy commanding.

County delegates A. O. H., in open carriages.

Ten divisions of the A. O. H., under Marshal J. F. O'Malley, with the following aids: John Walsh, John Jordan, James Maher, P. J. Curran, James Hanlan, J. L. Cunningham, Wm. Capel, Con. Harrison, Edward Canty and M. J. Finegan. There were probably 2,000 men in this division.

Benevolent division comprising a half dozen societies, and probably 1,000 men, under Marshal J. F. O'Brien, with the following aids: Hibernian Society, Sergeant John Burke, Patrick Wall, Hon. M. K. McGrath, John Finn, mounted aid; Shamrock Society, Dr. James C. Cogan, Thomas Kirby, James Haugh, mounted aid; United Sons of Erin Society, Walter Walsh, M. J. Cullen, Michael Mooney, mounnted aid.

Citizens in carriages.

The streets along the line of march were thronged with women and children, who waved handkerchiefs and in other ways showed their sympathy for the cause of Erin. There was plenty of music in the procession, numerous banners and flags, and a half-dozen wagons filled with boys and girls.

The procession was reviewed at the Courthouse, on Fifth street, by Acting Mayor Parker and other city officials, and at the Southern Hotel by the Knights of St. Patrick.

The Knights' banquet will be given in the ladies' ordinary of the Southern. The speakers will be D. H. MacAdam, Rev. Ambrose Butler, Ex-Gov. Thos. C. Reynolds, and John O'Grady. A splendid bill of fare has been prepared and a great time is expected.

The ladies' [illegible] leagues and several societies announce balls and [illegible]tainments for the evening which will be fou[illegible] in the advertising columns.

THE DAY ELSEWHERE.

In New York City the Irish societies celebrated the day by a street parade and a large open air meeting in a park on the east side, where addresses were made by several speakers. Patrick Egan occupied a carriage in the parade. Most Rev. Michael A. Carrigan, D.D., celebrated Solemn Pontifical Mass at St. Patrick's Cathedral.

At Brooklyn there was no parade, the Ancient Order of Hibernians going in the New York procession.

In Chicago the Irish societies held a big parade. The spectators were numerous.

At Montreal, Canada, the Irish societies are marching in a heavy snow storm.

At Ottawa flags are flying on all the public buildings, but there is no parade.

In Alton, Ill., a parade was held, participated in by the societies of Alton, Jerseyville and Collinsville, the line of march embracing nearly the whole city.

St. Patrick's Day was celebrated at Worcester, Mass., to-day, by church services and a parade.

The various Irish societies of the district passed at Washington, D. C. The President and members of the Cabinet reviewed the procession.

There was no public observance of the day at Philadelphia.

The Exposition.

To-day's receipts to the Exposition amount to $10,000, making the grand total up to date $231,000. Treasurer Cupples, in a communication, states that all receipts for subscriptions have been or will be mailed to-night, and requests parties discovering errors in form of receipt or not receiving acknowledgment for money paid by Monday to notify him immediately, and it will be cheerfully rectified. Legal opinion has been obtained on the subject of locating the building in Washington Park. The square was donated to the city by Thomas Smith, on condition it remain forever a public park, and in order to locate the Exposition building there it would be necessary to secure the consent of the heirs of the donator, who number about forty persons. Mr. Cupples hopes to have the amount necessary for organization by next Tuesday.

Four Courts Notes.

Alde Nelson died without medical attendance to-day at No. 1433 North East Twenty-sixth street.

Nicholas Rudy died suddenly and without medical attendance at No. 1341 North Eighth street last night.

Henry Stus was sentenced to two years in the Penitentiary from the Criminal Court to-day for grand larceny.

In accor[illegible]nce with his plea Chouteau Johnson was sent to the Work-house for six months by Judge Van Wagoner to-day.

An inquest was held this morning on the body of Charles Herndon, a colored child who died from drinking some concentrated lie in solution.

At 11 o'clock this morning Judge Jones concluded the argument for the State in the Rickert [illegible] and the case was given to the jury. [illegible] in the first degree.

manslaughter in the fourth and the usual acquittal. The debate in the jury-room is between first degree and culpable negligence, or fourth degree, which is punishable by two years in the Penitentiary at most. At 1:30 the jury went to dinner without having agreed.

GEN. DIAZ.

How Our Guest, the Mexican Ex-President, Passed the Day.

Messrs. S. H. Laflin, Edwin Harrison, George Bain, Henry Stanley, E. B. Miltenberger, Alfonso de Figuaredo, Brazilian Consul, and others of the entertainment committee on the Diaz reception, met at the Southern this morning and started in carriages for the Union Depot. The guests who were taken on the sight-seeing expedition to-day were Gen. Diaz, Senator Romero Rubio, Dr. Liceago and Senor Jose Rascon. Minister and Mrs. Foster and Minister Romero remained in the city to entertain the ladies. The party were driven to the Union Depot, where a special train was awaiting them. After a short ride a stop was made at the Silver Refining and Smelting Works at Cheltenham, where the guests were much delighted with an examination of the process of refining silver and lead, in comparison with the Mexican methods, which they described as much cruder. Next to Kirkwood and a run over the branch road to Carondelet. In this ride General Diaz and Senator Romero Rubio viewed the Grant Farm with much interest as both of them are personal friends of General Grant. At Carondelet the guests were delighted with the view of the Vulcan works, which was necessarily hasty, and from there they were taken to the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Company, where the process of beer-making was seen, from which point the journey was made in carriages to the Cotton Compress Works, the Cotton Exchange and across the bridge. Then a glance was taken at the Fire Department and thence to the hotel, where General Diaz reviews the St. Patrick parade. Gen. Diaz will banquet with the Knights to-night, and Mrs. Diaz and the ladies of the party will attend the Romany Rye performance at the Grand Opera-house, with Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Ewald, Mr. and Mrs. D. R. Francis, Mr. Web. M. Samuel, Miss Samuel and others.

FOREIGN NEWS.

LONDON, March 17.—Lord Dunraven intends to propose, at the present session of Parliament, motions in favor of legislation on behalf of the Irish laborers and for a large scheme of emigration in order to prevent a recurrence of the distress in Ireland.

Charles Witte, the German lawyer and writer, is dead.

LONDON, March 17.—The remains of the late Karl Marx were buried in Highgate Cemetery today. The funeral was private.

PARIS, March 17.—It is stated that Louise Michel has fled to Switzerland. Reassuring telegrams are received from the Prefects throughout the country. Precautions, however, are taken in the provinces to prevent any disorder Sunday.

Twenty-two Communist banquets and meetings are announced for to-morrow in various parts of the city.

It is probable the Anarchists will not meet in the Champ de Mars, as was expected, but will chose another place unknown to the Government.

The garrison of Paris will be confined to their barracks to-morrow. The Provincial Prefects have been ordered to send telegrams to Paris every hour to-morrow, reporting the state of affairs in their respective jurisdictions.

DUBLIN, March 17.—Biggar arrived at Waterford, yesterday, to appear in court to answer the charge of uttering seditious language in his speech last December. It is expected, however, that the Crown will apply for a change of venue in his case.

LONDON, March 17.—An examination shows that the case and contents of explosive material used in the attempt to blow up the Times office Thursday night were exactly similar to those found after the recent explosion in Glasgow. The ship Dunstaffnage from Calcutta via Dundee for Liverpool, has been wrecked on the coast of Aberdeenshire. Fifteen men besides a number of women and children were drowned.

DURBAN, March 17.—The whole country on the border of the Transvaal is in a state of anarchy. The natives are arming against the Boers. Chief Mahoch has just defeated the Boers, inflicting a severe loss.

LONDON, March 17.—Bismarck has abandoned his intention of submitting a bill for the revision of the May laws until more conciliatory results are obtained from the Roman Curia.

SAYING HER PRAYERS.

A Woman Burned to Death While at Her Devotions.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN., March 17.—While Mrs. Ann Roland was kneeling in front of the stove yesterday saying her prayers a live coal fell on her clothing, setting it on fire, and she was shockingly burned. She died this morning. Her three daughters were badly burned trying to extinguish the flames.

To-Day's Telegrams.

The river is falling at Helena, Ark., and fears of an overflow are over.

Hon. Carlton B. Curtis, ex Congressman, died this morning at Erie, Pa.

Capel's tile factory at St. John's, Quebec, was burned this morning. Loss $20,000.

The steamboat Grand Isle was burned at Wilson's Landing last night. Total loss, $25,000.

The steamship Elbe, from Europe, to-day brought in 291,000 pounds of gold coin and bars.

Geo. F. Williams has arrived at Cincinnati with the New York Herald fund for the flood sufferers.

Hon. Jeremiah Sherwood, formerly a member of the State Legislature, was buried at New York to-day.

Gingras & Langlois' large retail grocery establishment at Quebec, was burned to-day. Loss, heavy.

Julius Marcus, a New York broker, released on habeas corpus, has been rearrested at Portland, Oregon.

A gas explosion in Appleton street, Boston, this morning, danaged one building and tore up the street. One man was badly injured.

The Portland, Saco and Portsmouth depot, near Eliot, Maine, was burned to-day. The Post-office building and considerable mail was destroyed.

The report that J. W. Amalong, a juror in the Dukes case, at Belle Vernon, Pa., was assaulted is not true, although there is still great indignation.

Charles Henry Lee was found guilty of murder in the first degree at Richmond, Va. He was accused, with Mrs. Barbara Miller, of murdering the latter's husband.

At Reading, Pa., forty persons holding certificates of indebtedness against the Schuylkill and Lehigh Railroad, amounting to $117,000, will sue the Philadelphia and Reading Road.

A fire this morning at Detroit, burned the Round-house of the Wabash Railroad, and two freight engines. Two men were arrested on suspicion of setting the fire. Loss $30,000 to $40,000.

Among the public bequests in the will of Nathaniel Thayer, late of Boston, were $10,000 to the Boston Provident Asssociation, $5,000 to the Children's Hospital; $30,000 to the Massachusetts General Hospital.

President Arthur to-day pardoned Murphy and O'Leary, the three-card monte men, on recommendation of the Citizens' Committee, who want to use them as witnesses in the cases of collusion between thieves and detectives.

Among the passengers by the steamer Westphalia, which sailed from Havre for New York, to-day, are Lieut. Hunt, of the Jeannette search party, and sailors Manson, Leach, Barttett and Lauterbach of the Jeannette's crew.

The commissions of the following Missouri Postmasters were forwarded to-day from Washington: D. B. Kelly, Savanah; F. R. Mitchell, Grayson; C. E. Moore, Haydensville; J. E. Kline, Crittenden; J. J. Hocker, Hillborough.

There is great excitement in Montreal financial and commercial circles over the fact that the Bank of Montreal has taken out a warrant for the arrest of Thomas Hodgson, a great produce merchant, for obtaining advances from the bank on false pretenses. The accused has absconded.

The statement of the United States Treasurer shows gold, silver and United States notes in the Treasury to-day as follows:

Gold coin and bullion, $180,035,472; silver dollars and bullion, $165,669,204; fractional silver coin $27,695,346; United States notes $45,983,066; total $359,372,878. Certificates outstanding: Gold, $40,485,120; silver, $69,211,100; currency $10,155,000.

VISITORS to the Fair last fall will remember the brilliant display of embalmed flowers made by Mrs. S. Connor, of 820 N. Thirteenth street, this city. They appeared to be Nature's own handiwork, and very few knew that they were flowers of two or three summers ago, and that they had been preserved in all their apparent beauty and freshness by the deft fingers and incomparable art of Mrs. Connor herself. To a reporter she recently exhibited at her residence the latest triumphs of her genius. They are of wondrous beauty, and will well repay the hour required to examine them. Mrs. Connor is undoubtedly the best artist of her kind in the city.

THE McLean-Broadhead notarial ballot-box investigation was resumed this morning with the opening of another box, which showed two more votes for Broadhead than the returns presented. It is a tedious process.

OBY'S SENTENCE.

Eight Years in the Chester Penitentiary.

Scene in the U. S. Court This Morning--A Talk With the Prisoner--"As God is My Judge, I Have Not a Cent."

The dingy old United States Court room, in the Post-office building was crowded this morning, the space within and without the bar being well filled with spectators. The cause of the gathering was the expectation that Oby E. Owen, the defaulting teller of the Third National Bank, would receive his Penitentiary sentence. It was announced that court would meet at 11 a. m., and shortly before that hour Owen entered in the charge of a deputy marshal, and closely followed by Mr. John W. Luke, his father-in-law. The prisoner took his seat to the right of the room, where prisoners usually sit, Mr. Luke sitting next to him. Every eye in the court was fixed on Owen, who looked steadily at the floor and conversed in whispers with Mr. Luke. His attorneys, Mr. Charles P. Johnson and Mr. Estes, were present. There was some delay in opening court, Judge Treat being nearly fifteen minutes late, an unusual occurrence with him. Oby Owen was very anxious to have the business over, and once he muttered loud enough to be heard,

"I WISH THEY WOULD HURRY UP."

At a quarter past 11 o'clock District Attorney Bliss entered at the rear door of the court-room, and at the same moment Judge Treat appeared at the side door and ascended the bench. Both had evidently just came from the Judge's private room across the hall, and it was supposed that the delay had been occasioned by a consultation about the case.

In a minute court was called to order, and Judge Treat asked the usual question, whether there were any motions.

"If the court please," said Mr. Bliss, rising at the back of the bar, "in the case of Owen, I desire to move for sentence."

"Are there any suggestions to be made in the case further?" asked Judge Treat.

"The prisoner asks for no further delay," said Gov. Johnson.

"LET OWEN STAND UP,"

said Judge Treat, curtly, and Marshal Stearns piloted him to a place before the bench. "The offense with which you are charged," said Judge Treat, is peculiar in its nature, because it was not brought about by a sudden impulse, to which a man sometimes yields, nor by a temptation, which might seize a man who finds himself and his family in want. It was a peculation which continued, and which was a matter of years' duration. There may be a great deal of commiseration for a man who is driven to crime by want. That is not your case. The co rt would ordinarily be inclined to inflict the maximum punishment. But the court also remembers that you have confessed your guilt, have pleaded guilty, and that you have told many things that you know about the defalcation. The sentence will, therefore, not be the extreme one, but for the medium term of years. The sentence of the court is that you be taken to the Penitentiary at Chester, Ill., there to be imprisoned for a term of eight years, and that you pay the costs in the case."

OWEN SAT DOWN,

with his face very flushed. The crowd, who had only attended to see this part of the proceedings, jumped up and rushed out pell mell with such noise that the Marshal had to shout for order. In a minute the court outside the bar was empty.

Mr. Estes arose and asked if the sentence would date from the time of Mr. Owen's imprisonment, and Judge Treat replied that it would date from to-day. At the request of counsel the Judge said that Owen would not be sent to the Penitentiary until next Wednesday, and he ordered the Marshal to instruct the Jailer to let any of the prisoner's friends who called on him see him if he so desired.

"It is a stiff sentence," said Mr. Estes. "We expected he would get six years, not more."

"At Chester" said Mr. Bliss, "prisoners get a remit of five days a month for good behavior. That makes two months a year, or sixteen months during the eight years for which Owen is sentenced."

The crowd which left the court-room had gathered at the bottom of the stairs to gaze at the prisoner as he went out. He had gone up to the Marshal's office, however, where the POST-DISPATCH reporter met him and talked with him.

"Why was it, Mr. Owen," asked the reporter, "that you objected to the presence of reporters at the depositions?"

"The only reason was that the depositions covered a long time, and that the transactions mentioned would bring in a number of names of persons. The transactions with these persons were perfectly innocent, so far as they were concerned, and the public would get a very wrong impression from the publication of the names, without the proper explanations. I knew that the depositions would be filed, and that the public could get them as entered."

"An impression has gained ground that you were disposed to favor the bank?"

"Any such impression is entirely erroneous. After I had pleaded guilty I could have refused to testify at all in relation to my transactions. But both sides desired that I should testify and I gave as fair and as truthful a statement as I possibly could from the data I possessed. Of course, much of my memoranda, kept for my private information, I could not get at. This left altogether to my recollection transactions, the details of which it was impossible for me to remember. But I think that everybody connected with both sides will admit that I have done all I could to make a fair and truthful statement of how the bank's money was expected."

"There are many who still believe that you still have a considerable amount of the bank's funds."

"Well, this is most unfortunate for me, as I am virtually a pauper this minute. The support of my poor children will be left to my father-in-law, I suppose. As God is my judge, I have not one solitary cent left of the money which I took from the bank. I have relinquished all my property, and the only wish I had in trying to get bail, was, not to avoid punishment in this case, which I had long since determined to meet, but to use every endeavor that I could, among friends and relatives, to raise money to diminish the losses of the bank and my bondsmen. I feel as deep an interest and sympathy for my bondsmen as I do for the officers of the bank. I realize their former trust in me and I could not wilfully and knowingly do anything against their interests. If there are those who still think that I have any means that I ought not to have, I cannot help it. Time will tell and will prove that I have kept nothing."

As Mr. Owen talked of his children he shed tears freely and frequently put his handkerchief to his eyes.

"Good day, Mr. Owen," said the reporter.

"Good-by," said poor Obey' changing the word and slightly emphasizing it. Shortly after, he was taken out into the sun light through the crowded streets, where men gazed at him, and locked up in the Jail, where he remains until his trip to Chester.

QUEER REAELATIONS.

Oby E. Owen's chances for a lenient sentence were not improved by the interference of his sisters. Those ladies appeared one day during the week at the office of Overall & Judson while the depositions were being read over to the defaulting teller, and succeeded in creating quite a scene. They took exception to published reports of the testimony which showed that the bulk of the stolen money was consumed in the living expenses of the Owen family and insisted that the evidence of their brother was given under the influence of liquor. On this point one of them, addressing Owen in an excited manner, said: "I'll take care to tell the Judge where you got your whisky."

The ladies left the office to seek an interview with Judge Treat. An investigation over which the veil of secrecy was thrown, showed that Owen had been allowed two dollars a day by the attorneys to get his dinner and that the deputy marshal in charge of him permitted an indulgence in liquor at saloons on the way back to jail. The affidavit of the notary and stenographer were taken on the subject and were to the effect that the testimony was given under no alcoholic influence. The marshal who indulged Owen was severely reprimanded by Mr. Coste, and his place was supplied by another deputy.

A MISSING MAIDEN

Found Married to the Man Who Saved Her Life.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, March 17.—Miss Hulda Schmul, the young Prussian Jewess who was thought to be in the hands of Castle Garden sharks, has come to the surface unexpectedly. The first intimation the police received of Miss Schmul's whereabouts was when Samuel Jacobson, her uncle, entered Superintendent Walling's office, at police headquarters, half out of breath, and exclaimed: "Mein Gott! Mein Gott! Dot girl is in der city; a man game til me in the shtore chust now and towld me dot he knows where she is. So trew as I lif, Sheneral."

Jacobson stopped short and drew a long breath after this effort. Then he described the stranger who visited him. This person gave his name as Gustave Boeck, and stated that he had come over with the girl on board the Silesia, which arrived in New York February 15. He claimed not to know of her present whereabouts, but promised to make a search for her. Scarcely had Jacobson taken his departure, after telling this story and being blamed for not having made some effort to ascertain Boeck's address, than a second rapping was heard at the door of the Superintendent's office.

"My name is Gustave Boeck," said the visitor in very fair English, uncovering himself. "I have merely called to inform you that Miss Hulda Schmul is in good hands. She is now Mrs. Boeck, and has been living with me at No. 108 Division street since the arrival of the Silesia last month. I called upon her uncle this morning.

TO SET HIS MIND AT REST.

but I didn't tell him we were married, for, you see, my wife is a Jewess and I am Gentile, and the Jews do not look on such marriages with favor.

The man's open, honest face and courteous manner convinced the Superintendent that he was telling the truth. So he congratulated him on his marriage, but also advised him to inform Mr. Jacobson of the occurrence. Mr. Boeck bowed politely and left. He was found later in the day at his rooms in Division street. Mrs. Boeck, nee Schmul, was also there. She is a pretty little black-eyed girl, just such a one as her uncle described. The two told their story. Contrary to the uncle's statements, Miss Schmul had neither a brother nor a sister with her on her voyage. She left home alone. When the terrible collision of the Cimbria and the Sultan occurred the young girl, in common with many other passengers, was thrown overboard. She was about to sink when a friendly hand lifted her to a floating log. A ray of light from the British vessel's bow lit up the rescuer's features so that she saw them clearly. A moment later all was darkness again. Presently and picked up the young girl. She was taken to Swinemude and from there to Hamburg. In the latter city at a railroad depot she met Boeck, the man whose arm had saved her from a watery grave. Instinctively the two fell into each other's arms. The marriage took place in this city after their arrival. By a strange mistake, Boeck, who is a clever machinist and has lived for many years on Staten Island, had been included in the list of the Cimbria's dead. This circumstance caused the German Consul-General to return certain moneys sent to the Consulate by Beck's parents in Potsdam, Prussia; consequently the newly married couple were at once reduced to the greatest straits. The husband being unable to find work, his young wife, rather than brave the displeasure of her uncle, accepted a position as waitress in the German Hotel on Grand street, where she now is. A few days ago the couple decided to send a postal card to Mr. Jacobson, asking him to send all moneys arriving for his neice to the German Consulate.

BOAT PASSED

Illinois Legislature.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., March 17.—A few members were in their seats this morning, with Linegar in the chair. A large number of bills were read the first time. Reports of committees and other routine business consumed most of the morning. Some new bills were introduced, one to indemnify losers of sheep killed by dogs. The Senate bill for a vote of the people to build a free bridge at Peoria was ordered to a third reading. Also, one providing for a per diem of $5, ten cents per mile, and $50 to each member for stationery. The House adjourned till Tuesday at 10 o'clock.

State Legislature.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., March 17.—When the House met this morning there was quite a liberal display of green ribbons from the lapels of mem bers in honor of the day. At noon the Adjutant-General had a salute fired from Capital Hill. In the Senate the bill putting foreign insurance companies on the same footing as local companies passed. Senator Edwards' bill authorizing foreign banking institutions to establish branch banks in this State was indefinitely postponed. The House devoted the morning session to routine business only. The Senate adjourned until half-past two o'clock Monday.

Immortalized.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer.

Says Simon Tappertit: "There are strings in the human heart that had better not be vibrated," but evidently the Corticelli people find it profitable to vibrate the silken cord. Their latest effort to immortalize "Corticelli" is in a twenty-page book of pithy rhymes and humorous sketches that would cause a child's heart to bubble over with joy, written as "a parody on the House that Jack Built." The revised and improved edition is just out. A three-cent stamp sent to "Corticelli," St. Louis, will procure a copy.

A Big Swindle.

INDIANAPOLIS, March 17.—A receiver was appointed to take charge of the Marion Trust Company, located in this city. That concern has been in existence about one year, during which time nearly $200,000 has been taken in and $50,000 paid out. The victims to the swindle number about five thousand. The average amount received from each was $50. There are no assets. The concern does business in Missouri, Illinois and other States.

MARRIED WHILE DRUNK.

Remarkable Allegation of a Wealthy Young Man of Brooklyn.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, March 17.—Daniel Xavier Cleary, the son of a wealthy liquor dealer of this city, was married on Sunday, February 4th, to Miss Maggie Henry, who lived at the house of Frederick Wykoff, her brother-in-law, at 235 W. Fifty-Third street. On February 9th Mr. Cleary left his wife. On March 2d she obtained a warrant for his arrest for abandonment. When the case came up in the Yorkville Police Court, Mr. Cleary was not present. His lawyer said he was suffering from a beating which he had received the night before from his wife's relatives. The lawyer said that the marriage was not valid. Cleary insists that he was intoxicated when the ceremony was performed and did not know what he was doing. He says that arts were used to entrap him into a marriage. On February 3 he visited Miss Henry at Wykoff's house. There he became intoxicated, liquor being forced on him. In the evening he was taken to the Rev. Mr. Ewer's house, 152 West Forty-sixth street, by Mr. and Mrs. Wykoff and Miss Henry. The minister refused to perform the marriage ceremony, but told them to come back when Cleary was sober. He was taken back on the next afternoon and married. He declares that he was still under the influence of liquor. He says that he was kept drunk at Wykoff's house until February 9. Then he and asked his wife what day it was. She said Friday. "I must have been here some time," he said. "Since Sunday," she replied. "We were married, you know." Cleary says that this was the first he knew of the marriage, and that he believed it only when the marriage certificate was shown to him. Then he left the house. Mrs. Cleary declares that Cleary was sober when he married her, and denies that any liquor was given to him, or that any attempt was made to stupefy him after the wedding. Frederick Wykoff gives the following version: "Cleary always seemed to be much in love with my sister-in-law. He used to visit her about seven times a week, until a few months ago, when his father, who is quite wealthy, opened two new liquor stores, after which he came only three times a week. On the evening of February 3, Cleary

MY SISTER-IN-LAW,

my wife and I were out walking. Cleary asked Maggie if she would go with him and get married. She told him to ask me. He did so and I said, "It is about time you did something. You have been visiting her long enough." Cleary said, "Let us go at once." I then went to the Rev. Mr. Ewer, who I knew, and who married my wife and me. He said that Cleary had been drinking too much and that we had better come when he was more sober. We went home. Cleary stopped with us all night. Between 2 and 3 o'clock the next day we went back and they were married. At 6 o'clock of the same day Cleary went out, saying he was going to see his father to break the news to him. Mrs. Cleary took a room, where they lived together until the Following Friday, when he deserted her.

A Wife's Mistake.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, March 17.—Several months ago a decree of absolute divorce was granted to Mrs. Henrietta Schaefer against Isaac Schaefer, on the report of a referee by Judge Donohue. Mrs. Schaefer is now seeking to have the decree set aside. She said she was misled by acquaintances, and that she did not think that the suit would result in a decree of absolute divorce, as she only wanted separate support for herself and four children. Her special reason for desiring to have her mistake rectified is the fact that she had received an invitation to attend the marriage of Isaac Schaefer and Miss Annie Levy in Newark, Tuesday next. The motion to set aside the decree will be heard by Judge Lawrence in the Supreme Court Chambers.

Treasury Department,

OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY, }
WASHINGTON, February 24, 1883. }

WHEREAS, by satisfactory evidence presented to the undersigned it has been made to appear that in the city of St. Louis, in the county of St. Louis and State of Missouri, has complied with all the provisions of the act of Congress to enable National Banking Associations to extend their corporate existence and for other purposes, approved July 12, 1882.

"THE THIRD NATIONAL BANK OF ST. LOUIS,"

Now, therefore, I, John J. Knox, Comptroller of the Currency, do hereby certify that "The Third National Bank of St. Louis," in the city of St. Louis, in the county of St. Louis and State of Missouri, is authorized to have succession for the period specified in its amended articles of association, namely, until close of business on February 24, 1903.

Oil Market.

PITTSBURG, March 17.—Oil dull and transactions small; opened with sales at $1 02½; declined and closed steady at $1 00¼.

The Markets.

FORENOON SESSION.

"Weak as water" said a bull on grain sadly, as he gazed at the chalk marks on the Chicago and New York blackboards. The weather was clear and pleasant to-day here and elsewhere in the West, and this, added to the great bearishness that prevailed, gave no encouragement to the longs, but favored the shorts immensely. In New York and Chicago the situation was said to be very weak. The confidence of large holders of wheat and corn has been sadly shaken in the past forty-eight hours, and they are showing great anxiety to throw their stuff. Cables held out little encouragement, though by no means showing depression. Private cables state that Liverpool wheat is dull owing to American advices, but is fairly steady and would react strongly if the markets of this country showed any firmness. The reports yesterday of exporters buying wheat in New York and that considerable corn in Chicago was out of condition, were not confirmed. Private advices from Wall Street state that there is no special squeeze in money, and that the present high rates being paid are common on certain stocks. No advance in rates is anticipated for some days, at least. Some of the leading Chicago houses are looking for a heavy decline. One very prominent operator writes his St. Louis correspondent that wheat will go to $1 and corn to 50c during or before May. David Dows sends word that it is "a scramble between the Chicago bears and country bulls." The country has been fed upon reports of corners in May corn and wheat, and it has loaded up with heavy lines in expectation of a large advance. It is thought that when all the corn and wheat now being carried on winter storage is thrown upon the market that the country will become so fearfully demoralized as to sell at once, even if it does not get frightened before that and sling what is held. Reports of damage to winter wheat is still coming in. Very nearly all of them commence with, "The farmers say," out as an operator remarked, "the farmers usually have the crop ruined fifteen times or more before harvest," and but little credence is placed in these reports. Yet it is expected by a good many that there will be a crop scare, and, perhaps, several of them that will run the market up rapidly. Locally the grain markets were lower and the prevalent feeling was very weak. The short interest, which is in the majority here, were eager sellers and held a firm grip on the market, never allowing it to react much without a determined struggle on their part by selling offers to hold it down. The lowest prices were not maintained to the close, which was really firm with wheat ¼@⅝c and corn ⅛@⅝c below yesterday's latest sales. Oats received little attention and May closed ⅛c lower. Cash wheat was quiet and weak at a decline, millers getting most of the No. 2 red that sold, shorts the balance, and other grades selling in a small way. With the exception of No. 2 white-mixed, corn was lower, and at decline was weak and slow sale, No. 2 mixed showing most activity. Oats went off in price along with others and were salable only in a moderate way to local feeders and in filling orders.

Wheat—Receipts 8,868 sks, 16,900 bu. No. 2 $1 08⅜@1 08¼ regular; March $1 08¼ bid; April $1 09⅜@½ to $1 09¾; May $1 12½@⅝ to $1 11⅜, closing at $1 11⅞; June $1 11⅜ to $1 11⅞; July $1 07 to $1 06¾; year $1 04⅛ to $1 04⅜; No. 3 red $1 03 this side, $1 02@1 01⅜ in E.; No. 4 96½ bid regular; rejected 83 in U. and V., 84 bid for St. L.; No. 2 Mediterrauean $1 10 in C. and E.; No. 3 do $1 06 E. side.

Corn—Receipts 1,258 sacks, 187,000 bushels. No. 2 mixed 51¼@51 regular; March 51¼@51, with last sale at 51⅝; April 52⅜@½ to 52⅛; May 55⅜ to 54⅜, closing at 54¾@⅞; June 55½ to 55, closing at 55¼; July —; No. 2 white mixed 54 regular; rejected do 50¾ asked for St. L.; new do 52¼@52 in St. L.; new mixed 48½ this and 49 E. side; rejected 46 in A., 47½ in C.; no grade 40 in E.

Oats—Receipts 1,160 sks. 22,500 bu. No. 2 42¼ in A., 42¼ in D. and E., 42½@42¾ in St. L.; March 41 bid; April 42½ bid; May 42¾@43¼; rejected 42 bid this side.

Rye—Receipt — sks, — bu. Grade No. 2 sold higher at 58¾ in C., but was dull and weak at this advance, and later was offered in C. at 58½, with that bid for East side; rejected in C. brought 55.

Barley—Receipts — sks, 16,200 bu. The same quiet market, with little demand, but holders asked steady rates and were firm. We quote: Rejected at 45@50; No. 3 55@60; prime to strictly prime 62½@57½; choice 70@72½; fancy 75@80.

Flour Receipts 7,117 bbls. Market dull and easy at a decline of 5c@10c all round. Movement light, but little trading being indulged in, as orders were scarce owing to its being the closing day of the week. Values at the decline were weak at the following. We quote: Extra fancy $5 45@5 55; fancy $5 30@5 40; choice $5 15@5 25; family $4 66@4 70; xxx $4 15@4 45; xx $3 55@3 65; x $3 10@3 25; superfine $2 75@3 05; fine $2 80@3 90; favorite brands 25c higher; patents $6@6 75.

Cornmeal—Quiet and unchanged at $2 70@2 75, according to size of order; grits, pearl meal and hominy at $3 60@3 75.

Rye Flour—Unchanged but quiet at $3 90@4 10.

Millfeed was very dull and again lower, sacked bran selling at 76@77 track this side and ships at 90; common ships at 73 E. track and bulk bran at 70.

Hay—Receipts 390 tons. Except that better prices were paid for best prairie, there was no change in the market, the demand coming only for fancy stock. This side—Prairie $7@8 for prime to strictly prime; $8 50@9 50 for choice to fancy; common to choice clover mixed $6@10; timothy $10@10 50 for prime; $11@11 50 for strictly prime; $13@14 for choice; $15 for fancy. East track—Mixed $6 50@11; timothy $10@12 for prime to choice; $13@14 for fancy.

Provisions—32,540 lbs hams, 65,330 lbs meats, 105,205 lbs lard, 5,250 lbs grease. Stock of lard in New York, 31,912 tcs, against 61,129 tcs a year ago. The local market exhibited more than usual of the Saturday dullness, a decline in Chicago having a bad effect and causing the few buyers who were present to withdraw for concessions, and this holders were slow to give way to, seemingly having considerable confidence. Standard mess pork jobbed at $18 25, and May was held at $18 75, with an indifferent bid of $18. Prime steam lard worth about 10⅝. Loose dry salt meats held at 7.30 for shoulders, 9.85 for longs, 9.95 for clear ribs and 10.20 for short clear, the little selling being at these rates. Packed bacon short clear sold at 10.95@11; shoulders could be purchased at 8¼, longs at 10¾ and clear ribs at 10¾. Hams 11¾@13½. Tallow 8⅞@¼ for fancy cake; 8@⅛ for strictly prime in oil brls; No. 2 7½@⅜; in second-hand pkgs ¼ less: grease tallow 7@¼. Breakfast bacon 12@15½. Grease 5¾@6½ for brown, 7@7¾ for yellow, 8@9 for white. Beef—Extra mess $12@16 per brl according to brand; $7 50@8 50 per half brl; dried 12½@13¾, strictly choice 16 per pound. Fresh smoked tongues $4 50 @5 per doz. Salt—Domestic $1 20 this side $1 15 on E. side per brl. Ground alum $1 15 per sack for round lots, $1 20@1 25 in a small way.

Highwines—Local market unchanged at $1 15. Sales 65 brls. Cincinnati firm at $1 14. Chicago $1 17. Peoria steady at $1 16.

Lead—Firm, but quiet; nothing done and holders generally asking above what buyers will pay. Refined and hard both worth $4 27½. Spelter held at $4 35 and dead dull.

Grass Seeds—Still very quiet, but little offered and the movement only moderate. We quote: German millet 60@90, with sale of 1 car at 90c for really prime, common do slow at 40@60; timothy quiet at $1 45@1 60; Hungarian dull at 65@85; clover firm at $7 75@8 25, red top dull at 40@75.

Flaxseed—In demand and salable at $1 28 for pure.

Hempseed—Steady at $1 60.

Castor Beans—Wanted at $1 70 for prime.

Cotton.

A fair demand was had for local spots to-day and 656 bales changed hands at previous prices. New York was dull at 10¼ for middlings. Liverpool's moderate inquiry was freely met at 5⅝ for uplands and 5 11-16 for Orleans, and New Orleans, as usual, was reported quiet at 9¾ for middlings, with sales of 1,200 bales. Futures at the various markets show but little if any improvement, trading was light and values lower than at yesterday's close. New York opened quiet at a point off, advanced another point, and closed dull but steady, partly at and partly a point below last evening's figures. Liverpool was dull and 1.64d lower, and closed quiet about the same, while New Orleans opened dull at 1 point lower, closing dull but steady at last night's figures for the near-by months, and partly higher for far-off months.

CATTLE—There were only two or three loads on sale at the opening of this market, which was no disappointment to buyers, as none was expected, and the disposition shown to trade by the few who were present was not very great, there being only a few speculators and scalpers in attendance, regular purchasers of importance having withdrawn until next week. As a result there was no business transacted up to a late hour. There may be something done after the arrival of the morning trains, but it is not likely the movement will amount to much. Values were strong at the following:

HOGS—There was no market this morning. The supply was small even for a Saturday, and there was no demand for those that were on sale. Scalpers and speculators took a few, but the transactions were not of sufficient importance to publish. Under these circumstances quotations may be considered nominally unchanged at yesterday's closing figures, which were as follows: Light to good Yorkers $3 35@7 50: mixed to good packing $7 30@7 45; butchers' to extra $7 40@7 75; skips and culls $6@6 50.

SHEEP—Quiet and unchanged at $3 50 to $6 30 for common to fancy.

STEAMERS DUE IN TO-NIGHT.

E. M. Norton and barges, Cairo.

STEAMERS ADVERTISED TO CLEAR.

None.

Port Points.

The Bald Eagle made her regular run to-day in the Grafton route.

Height of center arch of bridge above present stage of water, 88.4 feet.

Business was lively on the wharf to-day, and will improve from this out.

The Belle of Memphis backed out this afternoon for Vicksburg with a fine cargo.

The steamer John L. Rhoads will leave for Kansas City next week in the Electric Line.

The E. C. Elliott was in and out in the Grand Tower run to-day. Well patronized both ways.

The Gem City, from Keokuk, is due in, but had not arrived when the reporter left the levee.

The Montana, Capt. Geo. Keith's mammoth steamer, is loading for Kansas City to leave at 5 p. m. to-day.

The W. P. Halliday, for New Orleans, in command of Capt. Beck Jolly, will clear at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

The river here is on a temporary rise, the gauge at the foot of Market street at 10 a. m. reading 19.8 feet above low-water mark, an advance of 0.2 of a foot in 24 hours.

The temperature to-day was somewhat higher than yesterday, though still not high enough to be uncomfortable. The day was bright and clear and would have been thoroughly enjoyed but for the dust.

New additions are constantly being made to the famous steamboat gallery of Jenkins & Sass. The gallery contains "photos" of all the noted steamers of the past forty years. It is the only gallery of the kind in the United States.

Raft Items.

No arrivals to-day. The past two days there has been splendid weather for rafting and running hardwood logs to market. The run of rafted lumber will soon begin. The Knapp, Stout & Co. Company will begin hauling wet lumber about the 1st proximo.

LEGAL.

Trustees' Sales.

SHERIFF'S SALE UNDER DEED OF TRUST.—Whereas, Ellert Hobbig and Hilke Hobbig, by their deed of trust dated the nineteenth day of March, A. D. 1868, and recorded in the Recorder's office of St. Louis county (now city), in book 379, page 290, conveyed to John Wilshusen in trust the following described tract, piece or lot of ground, lying, being and situate in the county (now city) of St. Louis and State of Missouri, to-wit:

Lot number nine (9) containing two acres and twenty-five hundredths of an acre in "Railroad Addition to Germantown," a plat of which said addition is of record in the office of the Recorder for the city (formerly county) of St. Louis. Said lot is bounded north by lot number eight (8), west by Switzer avenue, south by lot number ten (10), and east by Bidner, and being the same property conveyed by deed of Claus Wilshusen to the said Ellert Hobbig and Hilke Hobbig of even date.

Which said conveyance was made in trust to secure the payment of six certain promissory notes in said deed described. And whereas said notes remain due and unpaid, and the said John Wilshusen, said trustee, has departed this life without having completed the performance of the duties imposed on him by said deed of trust, and the Sheriff of the county of St. Louis having declined to act in place of said original trustee, and the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis having made an order on the fourteenth day of March, 1883, appointing the Sheriff of the city of St. Louis trustee to execute said deed of trust in lieu and place of the original trustee. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that at the request of the legal holder of said notes, and by virtue of the said order of court, and in pursuance of the provisions of said deed of trust, the undersigned will on between the hours of 9 o'clock in the forenoon and 5 o'clock in the afternoon of that day, at the east front door of the Court-house in the city of St. Louis, State of Missouri, proceed to sell at public vendue to the highest bidder, for cash, the above described real estate to satisfy said notes and the costs of executing said trust.

ISAAC M. MASON,
Sheriff and Trustee.

St. Louis, March 17, 1883.

Partnership Notices.

NOTICE OF LIMITED PARTNERSHIP.—I. C. W. Kalb, Frederick Schwarz and Elizabeth Kalb, desiring to form a limited partnership under the Statutes of Missouri, have this day signed, verified, acknowledged and filed for record in the office of the Recorder of Deeds of the city of St. Louis, Missouri, the following written statement, to-wit: Know all men by these presents, that the undersigned, I. C. W. Kalb, Frederick Schwarz and Elizabeth Kalb, desiring to form a limited partnership under the statute in such case made and provided, hereby make and sign the following written statement, that is to say: The names of the partners are I. C. W. Kalb, Frederick Schwarz and Elizabeth Kalb, all of whom reside in the city of St. Louis, Missouri. The name and style of the firm is Kalb and Schwarz, composed of the names of the general partners. I. C. W. Kalb and Frederick Schwarz are the general partners, and said Elizabeth Kalb, who is the widow of Theodore Kalb, deceased, is the special partner. The amount of cash severally contributed by said Elizabeth Kalb is nine thousand dollars ($9,000), which is the total amount she has agreed to contribute. The general nature of the business to be transacted by said firm is that of druggists and dealers in drugs, medicines, paints and glassware. The business is to be transacted in the city of St. Louis, Missouri. The duration of said partnership shall be five (5) years from the date hereof. The said Elizabeth Kalb, special partner as aforesaid, may annually withdraw for her own individual use from the means of the partnership the sum of six hundred dollars.

In witness whereof the said I. C. W. Kalb, Frederick Schwarz and Elizabeth Kalb have hereto set their hands, the 16th day of March, 1883.

SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1883.

TWELVE PAGES.

ST. PATRICK is especially honored in St. Louis to-day. The weather is simply superb, both for marching and banqueting.

BETWEEN British appression in Ireland and Irish dynamite in London, the American citizen finds it pretty hard to discover which side deserves his sympathy.

ANY day that calls itself after a saint ought to be a day of peace and good will, but there is a little quarrel between ST. PATRICK and ST. GEORGE which somehow mars the spirit of to-day.

MAYOR EWING is doing as well as could be expected in his Indiana retreat. It is understood that he has determined upon five of his fifty-seven department appointees. The Mayor is very methodical and he moves slowly. He should send for his able Private Secretary.

THE State University at Columbia has "resolooted" over the State appropriation of $100,000. This is as it should be. We ought to give this news the widest possible announcement, and then, possibly, some of the millionaires of Missouri will find it worth their while to endow a home institution.

THE story of the convict STANTON, who refused to be drawn from his cell under the weet persuasion of a heated iron hook, and who cut his throat before surrendering—one of the celebrated cases in the annals of our "Pen" at Jefferson City—has been retold in the report of the Legislative Committee, and it is very sad reading for the decent people of Missouri.

OWING to a mistake in the construction of a theater in New York one of the iron columns which was supposed to hold up the gallery slipped through the floor on which it was supposed to rest and dropped into the barroom below in a thirsty and off-hand way. The barkeeper's theory of the affair is that the column felt dry and the mucilage gave way. The architect of the building is now an official Inspector of Public Buildings in New York.

BOTH the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury are said to be worn out by the cares of State. The President has not recovered from the shock of attending the TABOR-MCCOURT nuptials, and FOLGER injured his eyes very seriously in trying to see the election returns from New York some months ago. Why will people court the dangers of ambition when they might be so much happier in that private life for which they are better suited!

THE name of Dr. CHARLES W. STEVENS has been mentioned as a possible nomination for the Superintendency of the Insane Asylum. It would be a very proper nomination, as Dr. STEVENS is an alienist of national reputation, and has his record of successful management of this asylum to point to as a sufficient credential. His personal gentleness and kindness of disposition add greatly to the value of his professional qualifications and would make his appointment eminently popular.

THE explosion in London the other night was a big thing for the professional Irish patriots who make war on England in the guise of long-range skirmishers. Mr. DRISCOLL's dispatch to O'DONOVAN ROSSA in New York yesterday explains the whole situation. "I can collect money now in Boston." The policy of the great Fenian Generals is to make a little unexpected belligerent noise in the neighborhood of the British lion's tail and then collect money industriously before the echoes die out.

OBY OWEN, the defaulting and embezzling teller of the Third National Bank, was this morning sentenced to a term of eight years in the Penitentiary by Judge TREAT. This was doubtless a surprise to the young man. The feeling of sympathy that at one time was aroused in behalf of OWEN has been perverted by recent developments, which show conclusively that his robbery of the bank was a deliberate and protracted piece of rascality, unrelieved by the extenuating circumstances which often seem to excuse violation of the fiduciary trusts. The sentence may appear severe, but it is ... It proclaims that neither social standing nor friendships can save a man who voluntarily enters upon a course of thieving, and the effect upon the community will be good.

THE Obstructionists of St. Louis have turned up at Jefferson City with a bill to circumvent street reconstruction under the system now being placed in operation. The measure passed the Senate yesterday. It adds to section 4781, Revised Statutes, the following amendment: Provided further, that when any street has been macadamized or constructed at the expense of the owners of the property fronting on such street, that the cost of remacadamizing or reconstructing the same shall not be chargeable to such property or property-owners.

A STRANGE feature of the quarrel between England and Ireland is that its bitterness divides two races as sharply as a river divides the land. We have yet to hear of a single representative Englishman who proposes to loosen the English grip on the Irish throat, or of a single representative Irishman who regrets or apologizes for outrages which disgrace humanity. This shows the deadly nature of the struggle which is just beginning, and it should be a warning to Americans to keep their hands off. We have never interferred in any European question yet and we do not propose to begin with this exceptionally ugly one.

IT is very generally believed that President ARTHUR is breaking down in health. The strain of holding the Republic up by the tail has been too much for him. He is afflicted with insomnia, his kidneys are deranged, he is troubled with catarrh, and is not feeling very well himself. A Government vessel is waiting to convey him out to salt water, but the business piled upon the desks at the White House will not permit of his immediate departure. By way of change it wouldn't be a bad idea to elect a twenty-five-year-old President one of these days—a chap who could eat big dinners and stay up late at night without shattering his constitution.

ON the 14th inst. our Jefferson City correspondent unwittingly reflected upon Senator C. D. YANCEY by coupling his name with the Oil Inspection bill in such a way as to leave the impression that he was identified in some way with the Standard Oil Company lobby. The correspondent disclaims any intention to reflect on Mr. YANCEY, and he seems to have simply been unfortunate in the phraseology of his letter. Mr. YANCEY is an honorable and straightforward representative and is not the agent or servitor of any lobby; nor does his course touching the oil inspection bill subject him to such imputation.

A GENTLEMAN has just been sentenced to the classic punishment of being "banished from Rome," for an offense for which he rather deserved a pension. Having a grudge against Austrian tyranny, he took deliberate aim with his trusty rifle at the double-headed Austrian eagle on the escutcheon over the gate of the legation and shot that proud imperial bird in one of its necks. For this is he banished from Rome, and may say with CATALINE, "set free from daily contact with the things he loathes." But it is obviously much better to take a shot at an escutcheon than to take a shot at an Emperor. Mutilating a shield is an innocent form of agitation compared with the dynamite idea, and it would be well to encourage the growth of a class of patriots whose fanaticism would seek no fiercer vent than this harmless but eccentric warfare.

MR. HOLGATE, of Philadelphia, is a cheerful citizen. By profession he is a manufacturer of infernal machines, and this is his view of his calling:

"I know nothing," said he, "of the uses to which my machines are put. I no more ask a man when he buys one whether he proposes to blow up a Czar or set fire to a palace any more than a gunsmith asks his customers whether they are about to commit murder, or a match merchant asks if his purchaser is about to become an incendiary. I make the machines for those who want them. I don't believe in killing kings with bombs, nor do I think that it is proper to assassinate statesmen with knives; but I would not have the cutlery business stopped because bad men make improper use of the dagger."

Inasmuch as guns are occasionally used for other purposes except murder, and matches for other purposes except arson, Mr. HOLGATE's analogy between his business and that of the gunsmith or match-maker is inaccurate and misleading. His wares are bought for no other purpose except murder or arson, and if a machine which had helped to accomplish one of these crimes could be traced back to him he might be taught by the persuasion of the Penitentiary the nature of his nefarious trade. Perhaps his trade is not technically criminal, but we do not allow people to advertise that they sell secret and certain poisons, and the prohibition might well be extended to infernal machines.

HARMONY and six good candidates for the Council will secure a majority for the Republican party of this city in April.—[Globe-Democrat.

We desire to remark that under the same advantageous circumstances the Democrats can carry St. Louis with a hurrah. Now let us have a little emulation in the matter of Harmony and the Sacred Six.

THE NEW YORK PRESS.

What the Journals of the Metropolis are Saying Editorially To-Day.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, March 17.—The Tribune says: "With one accord our local Irish patriots rise up and declare, 'We did it!' They do protest too much. Notoriety is what they seek, and to gain it they would confess to anything. It is to be hoped that the English people will rate the utterances of these vain cowards at their true value, which is nothing."

THE HERALD.

The Herald, speaking of the Irish situation, says: "To us the situation seems absolutely hopeless. Every Irish attack, whether it takes the form of an explosion at Westminster, a philippic in Parliament or a murder in Phoenix Park makes matters worse; for it alienates al classes, whether statesmen or workingmen, or mere on-lookers who would otherwise sympathize with a just and honest demand for freedom. There will be no possible respite until Ireland is allowed to make her own laws, and before that concession shall be granted the present generation will have long passed away."

THE SUN.

The Sun, referring to the desire of the Republicans to run the next Presidential campaign on the question of protection, says that, while many Democrats would look to accept the issue, only one result could come of it. Free traders would be left in such a minority that the most earnest among them would not be in a hurry to try the experiment very soon again. "There is no question," says the Sun, "that free trade, with the abolition of all custom-houses, is the only ideal and just system of commercial relations, just as perfect peace, with the abolition of armies and navies, is the only ideal and just system regarding the safety of nations."

PERSONAL POINTS.

—Aristocratic French ladies are patronizing English dressmakers.

—General Toombs has welcomed home his grand-daughter, who married against his will.

—Mr. Edmund Yates says that the age we live in is one of criticism rather than of construction.

—The Duke and Duchess of Connaught are traveling through France as Mr. and Mrs. Sussex.

—Arabi Pashi is said to complain that he is not receiving an adequate allowance, as was agreed by the Khedive.

—It is said of Mr. Burnand, the editor of Punch, that "he jests incessantly, has been twice married and has fourteen children."

—An Arkansas editor says that the stingiest man in his town talks through his nose to save the wear and tear on his false teeth.

—Mme. Bismarck has received from the Shah of Persia the highest decoration of that empire, an honor never before bestowed on a woman.

—Though Blaine was not shot at, the fact that he is writing a book is generally known, and the Chicago Times advises him to be on his guard.

—David Davis was much annoyed by the efforts of the wayside people to get a sight of the fat man who was going to elect himself Vice-president of his own household.

—Queen Corola of Saxony has a beautiful face and engaging manners. She is fond of English literature and reads stories of American life and customs to her children.

—The Rev. J. R. Day, a Methodist minister, until recently was preaching in Maine on a salary of a few hundred dollars a year. Now he goes to New York City at a salary of $7,000.

—The house where Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence, which (the house) has been one of the landmarks of Philadelphia, is now being demolished to make room for a bank.

—Miss Anna Oliver, the pastor of a Methodist church in Brooklyn, has decided to retire from her pulpit. She says that she no longer will be a bar to the recognition of the church by the conference.

—The widow of Dr. Glenn, of California, has written a kind and sympathetic letter to Mrs. Miller, the wife of the man who murdered him. The two ladies, says the Colusa Sun, have been like sisters all their lives.

—Senator Edmunds is not a pauper. He receives a liberal salary as counsel for the Vermont Central Railroad, and is consulted for an opinion in all important cases that come before the Supreme Court. From all sources, it is said his annual income is not far from $100,000.

—Frederick N. Crouch, the composer of "Kathleen Mavourneen," is a gray-haired man who lives on poor fare in Baltimore. A tattered coat of Confederate gray keeps some of the cold out. He is now out of employment and too old to help himself. He has a wife and five children. He tries to smile cheerily at fate, but admits that he needs help.

Answers to Correspondents.

TWO MERCHANTS—Annie Pixley is married. Her husband's name is Fullford.

T. THOMPSON—A city must have a population of 20,000 and the streets must be properly numbered before it can have a postal delivery.

DISPATCH.—When a pensioned soldier dies his pension ceases, but his widow may apply for and receive a pension on her own account afterward.

C.—Chinese immigration has fallen off very much since the enactment of the new law. It doesn't amount to more than one a day in California.

Why They Stick.

From the Chicago Times.

The pay of the Missouri legislators has been cut down from $5 to $4 a day, and the papers of the State hope that this will stimulate the Legislature to earlier adjournments. It may reduce the size of the poker "ante," but it will hardly have the desired effect, for $4 a day is much more than the average member of a State Legislature can earn in any other employment.

Industry.

From the Boston Post.

Louisville is making great preparations for an industrial exhibition to begin next August. Probably they mean to hire some man from Indiana to work, while the inhabitants stand round and gaze at the curiosity.

Census Lore.

From the Philadelphia Chronicle.

Some observant genius has calculated that in the United States there is one cow to every four people. It is believed that the same ratio exists in fashionable society, there being a calf to every four young men.

The Usual Way.

From the Chicago Times.

Civil service reform is coming fast. Mr. Pendleton's commission has taken rooms at a Washington hotel, and begun to run up a big hotel bill.

Back to Power.

From the Philadelphia News.

There is no help for it. The price of crockery is going up, and people who keep servants will have to go back to pewter, tin and cast iron.

The Cigarette Ticket.

From the Cleveland Plain-Dealer.

A Presidential ticket is: "Vanderbilt and Keifer," with a platform of only two planks, viz.: The public be d—d; the press be d—d.

Municipal Assembly.

In the Council last evening ordinances were passed for reconstruction of Locust street from Seventeenth to Compton avenue, and Pine from Nineteenth to Grand avenue, with asphalt. The Conference Committee's report on charter amendments was adopted. The Belt Railroad bill was read the last time and signed. The Fifth street railroad charter extension bill was taken up and adopted. The company will pay $25,000 annually for twenty years. The section restricting employment of conductors and drivers to twelve hours a day was not adopted. The Shickle, Harrison & Company have leased Papin street, from Twelfth to Thirteenth, for twenty years at $2,000.

In the House of Delegates the following ordinances were adopted: Gas inspection and appointment of an inspector; the closing of streets during progress of work of reconstruction and repair; the ordinance prohibiting use of fire-arms at theatrical performances. The Council message on the Charter Amendment Committee's report was not concurred in. There was objection to the date fixed for election. The bill for protection of horses and mules was ordered to engrossment.

Practical French.

Prof. Etienne Lambert will deliver a free lecture on the art of mastering French with conversational fluency in the ladies' parlor of the Pickwick, Tuesday evening next. Mr. Lambert is a skilled teacher of the French language, and uses the oral system entirely, his aim being to impress sounds and idioms upon the student, and thereby cultivate the ear as it is cultivated in music. His lecture will be illustrated by readings, and will no doubt be an interesting and instructive event.

SATURDAY CHAT.

THIS is a rear elevation of a Dude, the nondescript that is now attracting the attention of etymologists in the East. We have some snobs and a few cads in St. Louis, but the Dude has not reached here yet, on the principle, I presume, that we always get the fashions here about the time they are threadbare in New York. It is settled that the Dude is a biped, and it is generally believed that it is a vertebrate. It haunts the theaters, especially on first nights, and is a harmless creature with a tendency to idiocy. We shall look for a Dude or two to develop in St. Louis about the time the summer garden theaters open and the thoughts of young men lightly turn to angels in solferino lights.

THE peculiarity of the Dude iss it dress. Beginning at the top, we find a hat several sizes too large, resting well on expansive ears. Then there is an extensive area of upright shirt collar followed by immaculate shirt front and dress suit, ending in pointed shoes. But the crowning outfit of the Dude is its short, cream-colored "cover-coat," which it wears over its swallow-tail coat. As the dress-coat is from eight to fifteen inches shorter than the "cover-coat" an effect is produced such as is presented in the cut above. The drooping tails protruding from under the top-coat are thoroughly English and lum-tum. It is thought to be picturesque and the Dude is very proud of it. On this account the Dude when at a theater always goes into the lobby to smoke its little cigarette, and when approached, especially by ladies, will nearly always turn its back with a view to displaying the disparity between the tails of its two coats.

THEATRICAL advertising has about received its finishing touches at the hands of that excruciating bore "Alvin Joslyn," who is announced to appear at one of our theaters next week. "Joslyn," who is without doubt the worst star actor on the Continent, "faked" up a sort of dramatic nightmare a few years ago based on "Uncle Joshua Whitcomb." By keeping around on the outskirts of civilization and paying strict attention to one-night stands he has managed to make several barrels af money. His advertising weakness is diamonds and in his present display he has outstripped all the prosperous negro minstrels, successful side-show men and fortunate soap-boilers that the world has ever seen. He bedecks himself with jewels after the manner of an oriental Rajah and stands about hotels as an advertisement for well directed mediocrity and chilled steel cheek. Mr. "Joslyn's" latest freak is a highly colored lithograph of himself with a diagram of his diamonds. He is represented as a loudly dressed gambler with diamonds flashing from every available part of his person. The artist has given great radiating power to these Brobdingagian jewels, and the effect produced in the picture is about the same as if Mr. "Joslyn" had been instantaneously photographed while in the act of being splashed with rotten eggs.

ORDINARILY the man who rides in an open carriage in a procession would like to "stand on the sidewalk and see himself ride by," but it was well that General Diaz, being in the procession, did not have an opportunity of inspecting the array of skinny and ragged "crowbaits" that drew the carriages of the visitors to St. Louis yesterday morning. Every Mexican is supposed ipso facto to know all about horses, and after thirty years of military experience Diaz may be expected to have a sharp eye for the difference between a real horse and a skeleton horse, and he probably regretted that he had not reached St. Louis before all the good horses died. The Merchants' Exchange has the reputation of doing things up in first class style, and if they contracted for turnouts that were warranted to be strictly first-class they are entitled to as much rebate as crowbait.

ARE there any fine views in St. Louis? Yes, one of the finest views in any civilized country is to look down from the platform of the Merchants' Exchange upon a sea of upturned faces of the solid men of St. Louis, with the fountain and the bull-pen to break the level, and the majestic proportions of the Grand Hall, with its galleries, frescoes and windows, to make the background. I was called on to assist Gen. Frisbie in making his speech on 'Change yesterday (I held his hat), and while doing so made a note of the fact that the solid men of St. Louis make a very attractive and intelligent picture. They do not look like fashion plates, or band-box men, but thorough men they are, and the assemblage of Friday gave the visitor a better chance to get an idea of the best class of American men than they are likely to get in any other way.

QUITE a number of the reigning belles of St. Louis were noticed in the brilliant procession that defiled through the handsome parlors of the Southern to pay their respects to ex-Prest. Diaz and his wife, but there was no one to claim superiority in either beauty or accomplishments over the lovely young guest in whose honor the reception was held. I have known the society of St. Louis more or less for twenty-five years past, and I have occasionally met young ladies who spoke English and French well, but I have never known a young lady whose accomplishments went up "into the three figures," and who could speak English, French and Spanish as they are spoken by this young lady. There is no nonsense about her acquaintance with these languages; she does not stutter and hesitate and make-believe and mispronounce, but converses with ease, fluency, accuracy and purity of accent.

I AM told that Mrs. Diaz, whose full name now is Carmen Diaz de Romero Rubio, is of pure Spanish blood, her mother being a Castella, from Tampico. Her father, Don Manuel Romero Rubio, has had a very varied experience, although it is perhaps only typical of the Mexico of the past. As a lawyer he enjoys the most lucrative practice in Mexico, and his house and handsome library have been kept intact amid many changes. But he himself has been thrice a banished man, and, by a very odd coincidence, the enemy who drove him to exile in this country in 1876 is the son-in-law who is now escorting him through the United States in 1883. Romero Rubio was in the cabinet of Lerdo and left with Lerdo, but in less than a year was recalled by the shrewd Porfirio, who understood how to conquer his enemies by making them his friends, and who knew the value of the legal abilities of the gentleman whose daughter he recently married. In two years from now Diaz will again be President of Mexico, and then Romero Rubio will be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

THE friends of Diaz say that he is quite as much surprised as he is delighted with the hearty welcome given him, and that he had no expectation of anything of the kind. He has been in this country before, but only on the border as a fugitive, once going overland to New Orleans to take passage to Vera Cruz. Even after he was President this country strangely refused to recognize him for nearly two years, and he had no way of knowing that the people of this country cared much for him, and as he comes in no official capacity he expected no official honors and no special attentions of any kind. The attentions shown him will produce the very best effect in Mexico, where he is the popular idol.

I SUPPOSE a great many people have been to see the water color exhibition in Fine Art Hall, but if so they were there when I was not. Such an exhibition should have kept the beautiful gallery filled with admiring and appreciative throngs, and if it failed to do so, it has been because it did not obtain that preliminary working up in the press without which one might as well hope to run a successful season of public amusement as raise early asparagus without previous bed-making and fertilizing of the soil. A meritorious show will win on its merits—in time, but where it is impossible to await this slow method, printer's ink is the only secret of success in public favor.

OUR MAIL POUCH.

Injustice to a Justice.

ST. LOUIS, MO., March 16, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Under the head of "Modern Dogberrys" in your issue of the 14th inst. you administer a deserved drubbing to the volunteer system of justice courts. But in your laudable zeal to expose the ignorance of its representatives as a class you, unwittingly, no doubt, reflect with cruelty and injustice upon the intelligence of Justice J. H. Bueneman, and say "when he entered the office he knew nothing and was elected simply because of his physical disability." Judge B., a member of the St. Louis Bar, and formerly a member of our School Board, is a graduate of the St. Louis High School, and became a professor of mathematics of that institution before he attained his majority. If his physical condition does not allow him to fill a more remunerative position than that of J. P. (the salary of which is less than $1,000 per annum), it ought, at least, to be a protection against sneering reflections from a paper of your standing. Judge B., where truthfulness and reputation as a scholar are recognized by the public at large as well as by his old class-mates, requests me to state that there is no truth whatever in your remarks about cast-iron juries and other irregularities so far as his court is concerned. Please give this the same publicity accorded to your "Dogberry" article. F. W. I.

The War on the Wicked J. P's.

ST. LOUIS, March 16, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Every honest attorney in the city bids you God speed in your crusade commenced against the knaves known as Justices of the Peace and Constables. Double-shot your guns and use your best ammunition or the better attorneys cannot help themselves. If they "kick" they will be subjected to petty annoyances that will compel them to quit these courts or allow their clients to be robbed ad infinitum. Examine sections 2975, Volume 1, R. S., also Section 9, (last clause) Page 1521, 2d Volume, R. S., and you will see that there is a remedy for the jury abuses of these courts. It is the duty of the Court to summon twelve good men qualified to serve as jurors in the Criminal Court. It is the duty of the Criminal Court to excuse every person who being examined on the voir dire shall appear  to be a person * * who has served on any jury in any court of this State within twelve months next preceeding. If challenged for that cause, by either party, these men are not qualified to serve as jurors in the C. C.; they are therefore not competent to serve as such in magistrate's courts. Respectfully,

AN ATTORNEY.

Base Ball Information.

ST. LOUIS, March 15, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Will you please explain why the St. Louis nine plays only three games at home with the Cincinnati, two with Columbus and three with the Eclipse, and why the Eclipse play only six games with the Mets? B. BALL.

[For a correct answer to this we refer you to Messrs Phillips, Barnie and Mutrie, the base ball managers, who prepared the schedule of games. The games of the St. Louis with the Cincinnatis and other clubs were probably disposed of in the manner you mention because a shortage of games was necessary to complete the schedule. The St. Louis men, however, will have plenty of opportunities to show their ability, and they will have to do a great deal better than last season before any one will want to go and see them more than thirty five times.—ED. P.-D.]

An Alarmed Jeweler.

ST. LOUIS, March 15, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

As we jewelers are at present at the mercy of hoodlums, who rob one store after the other in a frightful manner, only to be successful on account of the absence of police, notwithstanding our Police Department discharged recently a great many officers, just after a time when the thieves robbed a great many jewelry stores—don't you think we need more protection? Several bad characters were looking around my show-window to-night. Two citizens came in and cautioned me. I sent for an officer, but none could be found. Could the Police Commissioners not be induced to offer us better protection and render our position safer? JEWELER.

A Sunday School Entertainment.

A song service is announced by the Fourth Baptist Sunday School for Sunday morning, March 25. Superintendent Hiram H. Post has arranged a very interesting programme for the occasion. Among the participants will be Revs. T. L. Lewis and J. V. Schofield, Mrs. J. A. Tackett, Miss Lizzie Bowen, Miss Annie Luedinghaus, Albert Sutton, Miss Julia Schofield, Mrs. Howell, Nathaniel W. Hunt, J. H. Blanton, Miss Anna Snydor, Miss Mary Hopkins, Mrs. S. B. Wilson, Misses Lizzie Parsons, Mary Morton, Cora King, Lily Tackett and Lucy Parsons. The lessons for the quarter will be reviewed by each class and papers will be distributed.

TELEGRAPHIC NEWS.

The Holiness Band are continuing their meetings nightly at the Swede church in Carthage, Mo.

On Friday evening the City Council of St. Joseph passed the new six-per-cent refunding ordinance which will be submitted to the people at the April election.

In Independence, Mo., on Friday James Talley, seventeen years old, was sentenced to five years in the Penitentiary for a criminal assault upon a twelve-year-old child.

A panic occurred among the audience at the Cosmopolitan Theater in New York, on Friday night. No one was hurt fortunately, but a number of ladies lost their pocket-books.

The work of cleaning up the debris and rebuilding the mills of the St. Joe Lead Company, in Bonne Terre, Mo., which were destroyed by fire on February 26, is rapidly being pushed forward.

In Atlanta, Ga., on Friday, Col. Thornton, publisher of the Appeal, went to the office of J. H. Norwood, publisher of the Union. A quarrel ensued and Thornton was forcibly ejected from the premises.

The large brick building owned and occupied as a manufacturing establishment by the Mexico Woolen Mills Company in Mexico, Mo., was almost totally destroyed by fire on Friday. The loss $60,000; insurance $30,000.

Alfred G. Backer, who murdered five companions in the San Juan Mountains during the winter of 1873 and then lived off of their flesh, was brought into Denver, Col., on Friday night. He made a full confession of his horrible crime.

Jacob W. Amalong, one of the jurors who acquitted N. L. Dukes of the murder of Capt. McNutt, in Uniontown, Pa., was assaulted on the streets of Belle Vernon, Pa., on Friday evening and so badly beaten that his life is despaired of.

In view of the fact of the passage of the appropriation bill by the State Legislature the faculty of the University at Columbia, Mo., granted a holiday to the students on Friday. In the evening the students adopted a series of resolutions expressing their appreciation of the liberal spirit manifested by the Legislature towards the University.

JEFFERSON CITY.

The Doings of Our Legislators.—Date of Probable Adjournment.

From our Special Correspondent.

JEFFERSON CITY, March 16.—In spite of the efforts of Senators Allen and Bryant, both of whom argued that the Downing high license bill was an unconstitutional measure, the Senate to-day concurred in the House amendments to the bill. These amendments simply corrected the phraseology of the bill, but from the row over them one would infer that the life of the nation depended on the issue. Senator Baldwin declared that the defeat of the bill would take 30,000 voters out of the Democratic ranks, basing his declaration on the statement that a majority of the people of the State had expressed a desire for the enactment of a high-license law, and that if they were disappointed in their desire they would fly to some party that would heed their demands.

Some work of interest to St. Louis people was done in the House. Hall's Scheme and Charter bill passed. This makes it obligatory on the Municipal Assembly to call an election whenever 1,000 persons, tax-paying citizens of the city, petition for the submission of an amendment abolishing the Scheme and Charter. The Garesche bill to authorize the examination of ballots in contested election cases passed, but the very object of the bill was defeated when the House refused to tack on the emergency clause.

After a three hours' discussion the appropriation bill was materially amended by setting apart one-third of the entire revenue of the State for school purposes. This makes an increase of one-twelfth, or, in plain figures, something like $163,000 per annum. Financiers up in State affairs shake their heads and assert that this increase will drain the cash box of every nickel, if it does not run the State into a debt which it cannot afford to carry.

the Davis bill providing that where persons have paid for street construction they shall not be liable for repairs—in other words relieving them from special taxation—was passed. There was aspirited fight over O'Brien's registration bill. It came up for third reading and passage, but O'Brien had the vote reconsidered and placed on the road to engrossment. Then the section relating to the printing of poll books and registration lists was stricken out, and Rogers tried to work in an amendment giving to the Municipal Assembly the appointment of officers in the various wards. This failed, however, and the bill went to engrossment. The bill giving Justices of the Peace concurrent jurisdiction with Circuit Courts in money suits up to $250 failed to pass.

To-night the Farmers' Caucus bill, fixing a uniform rate on all trunk and branch railroads in the State—three cents per mile—went through with a whirl. Not so with O'Fallon's bridge bill; that slipped up. The bill provided that, where a watercourse formed the dividing line between two counties, each county was to contribute its half towards the building of a bridge to span the stream.

And Ragan's bill was swamped. He wanted the office of State Superintendent of Insurance made elective, but his brother members did not agree with him by a large majority.

THE LIBRARY BILL PASSED.

The Senate Public School Library bill, which was defeated in the House on Wednesday night, was called up this afternoon, the defeating vote reconsidered and the bill once more put upon its passage, the roll-call resulting ninety-three ayes to twelve nays, proving conclusively that there had been a very great revulsion in feeling in a very limited period of time.

PROBABLE ADJOURNMENT.

There seems to be a mutual understanding between the House and Senate that 12 o'clock noon of Wednesday, March 28, will be fixed as the time of final adjournment of the Assembly. A resolution to this effect was introduced this evening, but on account of other business pending action upon it was deferred until to-morrow.

$100,000 DAMAGES.

Two Libel Suits Instituted Against the Missouri Republican.

Two libel suits for $50,000 each were filed this morning in the Circuit Court by Johnson, Lodge & Johnson; Jamieson, Collins & Jamieson and W. B. Bates, in behalf of Robt. S. Montgomery, President of the Shelbyville, Tennessee, Savings Bank and John R. Wallace, cashier of the bank, against George Knapp & Co., publishers of the Republican. The Publication complained of with reference to Mr. Montgomery was headed: "Indicted; the president of a bank for obtaining money under false pretenses from Geo. H. Small & Co., brokers." The article set forth that Small & Co. had been swindled out of $10,000 by means of drafts withheld, and it stated in conclusion that Mr. Wallace was cashier of the bank and likewise a notary, and that he was liable for the disappearance and destruction of the drafts which perverted acknowledgement by the bank. Mr. Montgomery's transactions with other brokers were likewise detailed. The criminal proceedings here resulted in the acquittal of Mr. Montgomery.

RUSH OF LITIGATION.

The Last Entries for April Term of the Circuit Court.

There is a rush of new suits at the office of the Circuit Court to-day, the last chance for filing for return to the approaching April term. Last year 375 cases appeared on the April record. At noon to-day 360 cases had been filed, and it is probable that fifty more may be brought in before 5 o'clock, when the office closes.

The following entries were made this morning: Lena Wetzell vs. Louis Wetzell, divorce on ground of desertion; Wm. Bagnell vs. St. Louis Brokerage Company, balance on note $1,500; Ellen Lister vs Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific Railroad Company, damages $5,000 for loss of husband; John Halpin vs. George F. Meyer and L. Methudy, damages $10,000, malicious prosecution; State to use of J. Hammersdilay vs. M. J. Murphy Furnishing Company et al., damages on bond; Ida Blumberg vs. Amos Blumberg et al., injunction to restrain defendant from disposing of business; Leonard Hunt vs. James J. O'Fallon; suit on notes; Connell O'Conner vs Patrick O'Conner et al., suit in partition.

THE NEW NICKELS.

Three Young Men Go Into the Business of Passing Them for Gold.

About ten o'clock last night three men representing themselves as POST-DISPATCH reporters, called at the grocery store of Winklemeyer Brothers, on Ninth and Webster streets, and purchased a box of sardines, giving in payment a gilded nickel of the new issue, one of them saying it was a five-dollar gold piece. When the clerk discovered the attempted fraud the three men ran away. At Ninth and Howard streets Officers Sullivan and McCarty arrested two of them. They gave their names as John Williamson and Wm. Williams. Five gilded nickels, a bottle of gilding, a file and a paper of cayenne pepper were found on the men. They are impostors and will be prosecuted by the police.

Miss Garrison's Retreat.

Mrs. Fanny Levi has entered suit for $5,000 damages against John Scott for bodily assault. Mrs. Levi, it will be remembered, at the time of the Zerelda Garrison excitement came into notice as the party who rented her upper rooms on Wash street near Seventh to the men who accompanied the young lady and she remained under Mrs. Levi's roof for one week. After the mystery had been exploded the house was visited by a host of curiosity seekers. Mrs. Levi complains that John Scott came there one evening, invaded the premises and savagely assaulted her with a poker, causing serious bodily injuries. Scott had taken exception to some published statements of Mrs. Levi connecting him with the arrangements for Miss Garrison's retreat. This is the only court proceeding that has arisen from the sensation which shook the town a few weeks since.

Madame Diaz.

Madame Diaz, accompanied by several other ladies, spent the morning in a tour of the retail dry goods stores of the city. At 12:30 o'clock she was entertained at breakfast at the St. Louis Club, given in her honor by Col. J. F. Howe, first vice-president of the Wabash Railway. Madame Diaz was attired in a toilette of heavy black satin, which became her remarkably well. The ladies at the breakfast at the St. Louis Club were Madame Diaz, Mrs. and Miss Romero Rubio, Mrs. Liceago, Mrs. J. W. Foster, Mrs. J. C. Ewald and Mrs. John A. Dillon. The gentlemen of the party were Messrs. J. F. How, R. S. Hayes, E. M. Switzer, T. Massac, U. S. District Attorney W. H. Bliss, Hon. J. W. Foster and John A. Dillon.

Struck With a Rock.

Sergt. Peter Joyce reported to Capt. Frangel, of the Third District, that at 11 o'clock last night Butch Dillon, Paddy Kane and Willie Woodlock went into Hong Lee's laundry, No. 2316 Franklin avenue, and became involved in a difficulty with the Chinaman. Some one of the young men struck Lee on the forehead with a rock, cutting him very severely. After the fight the men escaped, but subsequently Officer Crawford of the Third sub-district arrested Woodlock, who was placed in the hold-over at Seventh and Carr streets to await the result of Lee's injuries. Woodlock says that Kane threw the rock that struck the Chinaman.

"DETECTIVE" RUSSELL.

A Crooked Young Man Caught in a Bad Scrape.

Shortly before 1 o'clock this morning a lively fusilade was heard at Sixth and Market streets which sounded as if somebody had suddenly turned the crank of some neighboring Gatling gun. Seven shots were fired, but when the smoke of battle calmly cleared away it was discovered that nobody had been hurt. A scuffle occurred on the scene of the shooting, and by 1 o'clock the three principals were locked up at the Chestnut Street Station. About 10 o'clock last night a telegram was forwarded from the Fourth District Station, which read on the police dial, "Look out for four men in a two-horse buggy." This was read to the officers at the 11 o'clock roll-call, and while Officer Ziegler was on the second round of his beat, he discovered a two-horse buggy with one man seated in it on Sixth street, near the north side of Market. At a boxing-match at Tom Kelly's, a few doors west of Sixth street, he met Officer Lyon, to whom he confided his suspicion. When the two officers reached the corner again there were three other men in the wagon, and the horses were starting up. Ziegler grabbed the reins while Lyons ran to the side of the vehicle. Three of the men jumped from the east and one from the west side of the rig and all began to run. Lyons followed the man running up the west side of Sixth street and overtook him about thirty feet from the starting point. The three pals stopped opposite the officers and one of them fired across the roadway four times. Lyons drew his weapon but his aim was unsteadied by the attempts of his prisoner to escape, and he emptied his weapon without hitting anybody. Officer Zeigler had hold of the plunging animals, and as soon as he was released from this he went to the assistance of his brother officer, firing one shot and pursuing the trio. Sergeant Hall was walking south on Sixth street from Pine street at the time, and was attracted by the reports of the eleven shots. A young man came running up and Sergt. Hall ordered him to halt, but the fleeing man paid no heed to the order, which was enforced by a well-directed swing of the Sergeant's night club. A few minutes later Officer Ed Flynn and Detective Howard, who were in the locality, appeared, and while the former was on his way up the stairs of the Ivy house, he met and arrested R. M. Russell, the private detective who gained notoriety a few months ago and was indicted for blackmail robbery. This morning Jimmy, alias Red Mullen, was arrested and locked up with Russell, John Ryan and Ed. Chambers, who were arrested last night. The rig was identified by Mr. Geiger, the livery man at Tenth and Pine streets, as one he hired to Russell yesterday. Russell says that the vehicle was stolen from him about 8 o'clock last evening at Twenty-first and Olive streets, but this does not agree with the statements of Officer Collins and Scully, who say they saw Russell and three other men at 8:30 o'clock last evening in the same wagon at Thirteenth and Chambers streets. When Russell was searched at the police station a number of photographs of women were found in his pockets. He is a notorious character and his business as a "detective" has been to play spy on prominent people in the city and extort money from them by threats of compromising them.

The four prisoners are held while the police are trying to gather evidence to convict them with the attempted burglary of a jewelry store at Fourteenth and Chambers, and the burglary of Craft's tailor shop, No. 1314 Market street, from which $70 worth of goods was stolen last night.

The Weyl Divorce.

Among the divorce cases filed for the approaching term of the Circuit Court is found the petition of Mrs. Matilda Weyl seeking a decree of divorce from Augustus Weyl, Vice-President of the Dozier-Weyl Cracker Co. Mrs. Weyl simply states that her husband, for more than a year past has deserted her without cause or provocation. He resides at the Lindell Hotel. Mrs. Weyl is living with her friends. The children have attained their majority and no order is necessary for their custody, but alimony is asked for proportionate to the husband's resources, which are stated to be large.

The Biddle Market Gang.

Emile Rosey, Eugene Daly and Thomas Camper were fined $500 in the Second District Police Court this morning for vagrancy, under the eighth clause, and given six hours to leave the city. These are the last of a gang of roughs known as the "Biddle Market crowd," which Officer Sponeman, of Capt. Frangel's staff, has effectually broken up, after several months of hard work.

ABOUT TOWN.

HON. JOHN MONTEITH, ex State Superintendent of Public Schools, will speak in the Mission Chapel, corner of Ninth and Wash streets, to-morrow night.

A SERIES of gospel meetings are being held in Sturgeon Market Hall, North Market street and Broadway, every evening except Saturday, under the conduct of W. P. Charles.

THE sixth lecture of the Unity course will be given Thursday evening at Mission Chapel, 9th and Wash streets, by Prof. H. C. Ives, of the Washington University, who will illustrate it with stereoscopic views of the great museums of London and Paris.

OUR Mexican visitors took advantage of their stay in St. Louis to replenish their wardrobe and W. A. Shea was the lucky "Artist Tailor." The distinguished party attracted considerable attention in his store under the Laclede Hotel while making selections from his elegant stock of spring goods.

LACLEDE LODGE, No. 2392, Knights of Honor, have issued invitations to a musical and literary entertainment and hop at Turner Hall, Tenth and Carroll streets, this evening, in celebration of their second anniversary. An elegant programme has been prepared, and a most enjoyable time may be looked for by those favored with tickets.

BOOGHER'S Repository of History, Biography and Genealogy for March is out and contains, besides several steel engravings of the subjects treated, a large amount of interesting reading. It is a very valuble compilation of historical and other records, and can be had with Demorest's Monthly, New York Life, and other periodicals, at W. H. Gray's news depot, 709 Olive street.

MESSRS. JONES & DELANO, attorneys, this morning filed in Justice McCaffrey's court a suit against Brooks & Dickson, managers of the Romany Rye Company, in favor of O. D. Tucker, of this city. The suit is for the recovery of a balance of $175, alleged to be due in a bill of $355 contracted by Brooks & Dickson with Mr. Tucker for his services in assisting to bring out the Romany Rye at Booth's Theatre, New York, last September.

MAURICE LEDERMAN, aged 14 years, left his father's home, 1266 South Eifth street, at 6:30 p. m., Monday, to meet a friend who had promised him work in a book-store. He has not been seen since and his parents are very uneasy concerning him. The boy wore a dark brown coat and vest, gray pants, brown ulster, and had on a silver watch and gold chain and gold ring. He is of fair complexion with brown hair and gray eyes.

CITY NEWS.

The Windsor Hotel conspiracy case resulted last evening at 9 o'clock in a verdict of acquittal under the Criminal Court's instructions. There was no conspiracy in it.

The School Board building committee has decided to build an addition to the Penrose School and improve the means of egress. At present it is considered a mere fire-trap.

A bold burglary was committed last evening at the tailor-store of August Kralt, at 1317 Market street. The windows were broken and several bolts of cloth removed by three men who drove up in a wagon.

The Woman's Suffrage Association met last evening at the Belvedere. Charles P. Johnson is to lecture at Memorial Hall, April 12, at the invitation of the Association. A paper was read advocating medical education for women.

Rabbi Spitz lectured last evening at the Chouteau avenue synagogue to Hebrew ladies, urging modesty, simplicity and loving obedience as infallible means for preserving pure womanhood. He denounced the extravagance of the age.

The Muehlhausen damage case against the St. Louis Railroad Co., Fifth street line, resulted in a verdict last evening in favor of plaintiffs for $5,000. Their little boy was taking a free ride on the front platform of a car and fell under the wheels, causing death.

A $100,000 Fire.

JACKSONVILLE, TEX., March 17.—A fire yesterday consumed an entire block. Loss, $100,000; insurance light. The Post-office was destroyed and the following firms burned: Bolton Bros., Tilly & Settle, Jarrett & Jones, Pierce & Ragsdale, E. Rothschild, W. D. Browder and J. M. Gibson.

MR. W. C. STEIGERS,

Of the POST-DISPATCH, will call upon parties who wish rates for advertising in this paper.

LAW TO ORDER.

Incidents Showing the "Jedges" to be Ignorant and Partial.

How His "Honor" Stands by Men of "Influoence"--Serving a Man in a Lunatic Asylum --A Trial by Candlelight--Amusing Stories of the Little Law-Shops.

"I know I have no knowledge of law," said Pat Sheehan, a newly elected Justice of the Peace, in conversation to-day. "The POST-DISPATCH is right about that. I never told these people when I was running that I had any legal knowledge, and if I did they would not believe me. My friends know better than that."

"And how about the juries?"

"Oh, these lawyers, at least many of them, don't want good juries. They never complain, and, in fact, they would rather have bad ones, I believe. In fact, some of them would."

Here was a Justice of the Peace who had the merit of being frank, at least. He could not conceal his ignorance, so he did the next best thing—admitted it. And if a l of them would be as frank as Mr. Sheehan, all of them would have to admit that they knew nothing at al about law. There are two or three parties in town who have been in the business so long that experience ought to have taught them something. But Justices of the Peace seem to be like Bourbon Democrats. in the sense that they never learn anything and never forget. They never can forget the time that they were carpenters, or hod-carriers, or dray drivers, and they never can manage to learn a single point of law, with the exception to be hereinafter noted.

"Why," said a prominent attorney to a POST-DISPATCH reporter this morning, "you accuse Justices of the Peace of being ignorant of the law."

"Yes."

"Well, they are usually well acquainted with portions of the statutes."

"They are?"

"Yes, sir. I know it from experience."

"What parts of the statutes?"

"I'll tell you. You go into the office of any Justice of the Peace. Pick out any one you like. I don't care which. Take up the copy of the Missouri Statutes which you will find on the table. Lift it up about two feet from the table. Let it fall, with the back pointing downward, and I'll bet you a $10 note against a dime museum ticket that it falls open at the fee bill."

"At the fee bill?"

"Yes, that is the only thing they read. You will find the pages where the statutes state how much it is to be charged in each particular case all thumbed and dirty, showing signs of constant use. The Justice of the Peace reads it, and when he is at all busy the Constable spells it over and makes it out, as fast as he can, with his limited education, how much he can mulct poor devils of clients out of. Then the 'cast-iron' jurymen take turns at it, because they want to know how much their friend the Constable, and their friend the 'Jedge' make in certain cases. These pages are read and studied over, but if you turn half a dozen pages, either way, you will usually find the book as clean as if it had just come from the printing house. These are the only law questions that interest these Solons."

"Yes," said a bystander, "and they know now and then how to increase their fees. A couple of years ago it cost only about $3 50 for a landlord summons to eject a tenant for non payment of rent. Then the 'Dogberrys' got together, went up to Jefferson City and had the expense increased to something over $6, and even at that, you can scarcely get a delinquent tenant out, because they are protected by the 'cast-iron' juries, and if the Constable happens to be a friend of the tenant's, he'll be sure to fix the jury so that you will be sure never to get the tenant out without an appeal."

An instance of the power of Constables, and the straits to which they will go to help friends, was furnished in the case of Charles Harrison, the Seventh street livery stable keeper, only a couple of months ago. Harrison had been drinking heavily for years and finally so undermined hi reason that le had to be sent to St. Vincent's Insane Asylum. A considerable time previous to his incarceration he had purchased a barouche from a Franklin avenue carriage manufacturer, for which he had never paid in full. He gave no note, but whenever he had money he would hunt up the carriage-maker and give him an installment. Before the amount was paid in full Harrison was sent to the insane asylum. After some time he was liberated and taken home, and while there and while still weak in mind, the carriage-maker called at his house, took him out, filled him up with whisky, and while ne had him in this condition induced Harrison to sign a sixty-day note for the amount of the bill. Harrison did so, and within a few days was taken back to St. Vincent's Asylum, as his condition was found not be improved at all. He was still in the asylum when the note became due, and none of his family knew that he had ever given it. The carriage-maker brought suit before 'Jedge' Taaffe on Chestnut street. A son of Constable Carroll, who was acting as deputy at the court, was instructed to serve notice of suit on Harrison. He did so. He went down to the asylum, where the man was locked up, an imbecile, had him brought into the parlor, served notice of the suit on him then and there and showed him the note.

"'Is that your signature?' said smart young Deputy Constable Carroll.

"'Yes,' said poor Harrison, who did not know what he was talking about. "That's my signature, but I never wrote it."

"'More trouble, more trouble," said the poor fellow, as the attendant lead him away. Carroll returned to court and reported that he had served Harrison. When the day for the trial came nobody was there to represent him. The reason was plain. Harrison was locked up in the lunatic asylum. None of his friends had ever been notified of the filing of the suit. Nobody appearing for Harrison. "Jedge" Taaffe gave judgment by default in favor of the carriage-maker. That same day the latter went up with a Constable to Harrison's stable, carried away the barouche in question and a buggy to satisfy the judgment, although considerable money had been paid on the barouche. Taaffe, when asked whether he did not know that Harrison was in the insane asylum at the time, said "No," that nobody had told him where he was. So that it is evident that young Carroll had simply returned that he had "served." Carroll said nothing about the circumstances and had let the trial go by default, when he knew the defendant was locked up in a lunatic asylum. Harrison's friends have brought the matter before the Circuit Court. It would be difficult to point to than this, all done, of course, either through the ignorance or the neglect of the deputy mentioned.

Another case, which has a more ludicrous side, will serve to show how Constables are a law unto themselves. All the lawyers in town know Henry B. O'Reilly, who is now located in Denver. Some years ago Henry's talent began to run towards constitutional law. He was earnestly interested in upsetting the Scheme and Charter, which was then under hot fire, talked loudly about the rights and privileges of the people, and in fact the change in his ways became so marked that his friends began to call him the great constitutional lawyer. About this time somebody got a judgment against O'Reilly and he put it for collection in the hands of Charlie Vasel, a former Constable whose name and fame are familiar to every newspaper reader. Vasel had the name of taking the meanest ways possible of collecting debts. One time he arrived at O'Reilly's house just as the latter was arriving home to his supper. Vasel announced that he was going to levy on the furniture to satisfy that judgment.

"What judgment?" said O'Reilly.

"You know well enough," said Vasel.

"Don't you know this is not the right way to go about it?" said O'Reilly.

"I'll do it, anyhow," said Vasel.

"This property is exempt under the law."

"D——n the law," replied the Constable.

"Do you know that I am a lawyer, sir?" said O'Reilly, drawing himself up.

"I don't care a d——n what you are," was Vasel's answer.

Mr. O'Reilly resisted, as he had a perfect right to do, this nocturnal raid upon his property. The result was that Vasel and his "heelers" knocked him down, bucked and gagged him, and loaded him in the wagon they had brought to take away the furniture. They hauled the great constitutional lawyer through the streets, took him out to a suburban Justice of the Peace's office and sent out for ten cents' worth of tallow candles. They lit up the court, and at 10 o'clock at night tried O'Reilly for obstructing the process of the law, found him guilty in double quick order, locked him up in the common jail, and kept him there until next morning before his friends discovered his whereabouts. The story was pretty well hushed up, and never came out, except among O'Reilly's friends, who had many a laugh at the great constitutional lawyer, who talked about the rights and liberties of the people and who could not protect his own. All of which goes to show that Constables are not only ignorant, but that they can be very vicious when they have private spites to gratify, which is nearly all the time.

SAMPLES OF IGNORANCE.

A prominent lawyer, who was met this morning, being asked what he knew bout the Justices, said, "I could give you a dozen instances of their stupidity, any one of which would be sufficient to remove the Justice committing it from the bench. Here is a sample case that I know of myself:

A, living in another State, loaned a certain sum of money to B, taking by way of security a pledge of certain personal property belonging to B. B, proposing to remove to this city, placed with the goods pawned a few other articles of his, and requested A to ship by express to St. Louis all of his (B's) goods in the possession of A, the express charges and the debt to be collected "C. O. D.," as the expression goes. A complied with B's request. Upon the arrival of the goods in St. Louis, B sued out before one of the aforesaid "Jedges" a writ of replevin for said goods. Held: That B was entitled to all the goods, notwithstanding the fact that the admixture of the pledged and unpledged goods was B's act, and that the unpledged goods were susceptible of identification. I might state in conclusion that B's attorney was the attorney for the "Jedge" in one or two matters then pending in a other court."

WILL STAND BY A FRIEND,

even if the law goes to thunder. X held a judgment against Y upon which a return of "nulla bona" had been made. He garnished Z on the ground that he was indebted to Y. The Garnishee answered denying his indebtedness to Y. X replied and the case was set for trial. When it was called, neither X nor his attorney appeared. Z's attorney did not ask for a dismissal, as he could have done, but suggested, for the benefit of X, that his attorney be sent for, or the case continued. Although a broiling hot day the "Jedge" sent his clerk to the office of X's attorney. The attorney was not found. The case was continued, Z's attorney cheerfully consenting. Before the day set for the next hearing Z's attorney met X's, told him of the continuance and also talked over the facts in the case. X's attorney was surprised to learn the facts of the matter, and on parting with the other attorney told him to have the case dismissed if he, K's attorney, did not appear at the time set for the trial. He did not appear, and thereupon Z's attorney moved to have the case dismissed, telling the "Jedge" of his conversation with the other attorney. The "Jedge" would not then dismiss the case, but made the attorney wait for two hours until he tried another case. The motion was then renewed, but refused until the other attorney could be sent for. Again the clerk trotted off to hunt Mr. X's attorney, but returned without him. The motion was again urged. The "Jedge" objected and insisted on continuing the case. At this T's attorney got a little "hot" and demanded that the case be dismissed. To this demand the "Jedge" finally assented, at the same time remarking: "If Mr. ——, (X's attorney,) appears at any time and asks to have this dismissal set aside, it will be done." To which Z's attorney replied, "Then, no doubt but that under the circumstances, it will be set aside. I apprehend that anything Mr. —— wishes will be done." 'Twas a man of some "influoence," and his "Honor" would be very glad of his friendship were he running for office, while his attorney was a lawyer of considerable practice in that court. Z.'s attorney had not the honor, pleasure or profit of an acquaintance with his "Honor." A lawyer can furnish you with dozens of such cases.

The Scott's Recital.

The Pickwick Theater was crowded last night on the occasion of the Scott recital, and the entertainment more than pleased the fashionable and critical people who sat through it. A programme, in which there was a judicious admixture of dramatic and humorous features, was presented, and the selections being from standard sources, and every one of them receiving artistic interpretation, there was literary as well as elocutionary merit in the performance. Mr. and Mrs. Scott were enthusiastically encored for each of their individual contributions to the entertainment, and the lady, who is fully equal to the work required of her in the dual profession she has adopted of artiste and teacher, received several beautiful floral tributes. In the comedetta "Plot for Plot" that closed the programme, Mr. Scott and his wife showed themselves entirely at home on the stage and gave a performance which was thoroughly enjoyed and heartily commended. The triumph achieved by themselves was added to greatly by the success that attended the efforts of their pupil, Mr. Guy Lindsley, who gave two or three selections in splendid style, reflecting his excellence of his teachers' work in his own, and giving promise of developing considerable power for the dramatic stage. Mr. and Mrs. Scott have won a high position among local artists and their annual entertainment is always eagerly looked forward to as a pleasure, and they are generally as successful as was that given last night.

HEALTH FOOD.
OVER-FATNESS is invariably reduced by a proper use of these foods. The method is not untested, but has been practiced for years and never fails when earnestly pursued. Unlike all other methods, it is never productive of harm, as it never lowers the vital powers. It leaves no flabby tissues, but replaces ponderous fat and waste with elastic muscle, provides perfect nutrition and thus imparts color to the cheek and brilliancy to the eye, and gives elasticity alike to body and brain. For an exceedingly interestingly interesting treatise on excessive fatness, including directions and bill of fare, inclose 10c and address Agent Health Food Company, 2227 Walnut st., St. Louis.

Decatur, Ill.

Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

DECATUR, ILL., March 16.—The testing of the new Clapp & Jones pump, which has just been placed in position at the waterworks, occurred yesterday. Four pipes were turned on at the same instant on each corner of the City Park.——Wm. Evans, a brakesman of the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific, while uncoupling a freight train at Boone the night before last, fell under the cars. His right leg was almost severed.——Mr. J. Orr while leaving a street car last night had his pockets picked of pocket-book, in which was $30.

Warrenton, Mo.

Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

WARRENTON, MO., March 16.—What came near terminating in a personal encounter, occurred at the College this morning. The principals in the affair were Prof. J. P. Pfaff, teacher in the Preparatory Department, and Mr. John G. Vogt, a member of the junior class. The trouble originated in Mr. Vogt who is the College correspondent for the Banner, publishing the following: "Three groans for Prof. Pfaff! His 'chapel talks' are hardly ever original." Upon reading the article, Pfaff immediately repaired to Vogt's room and demanded his reason for publishing the article. Mr. Vogt informed him that he considered himself at liberty to publish any statement for the veracity of which he could vouch. Hereupon the irate Professor threatened to lay hands upon Mr. Vogt, and would have carried his threat into execution but for the presence of several students.

Jerseyville, Ill.

Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

MOTHER AND SON!
THE SWEETEST PLEASURES
Are those which do not exhaust hope; but many pleasures, like some advertisements, are supported upon illusions, both promising PEARLS, but upon reaching the bottom we find only pebbles. Honest, nicely-made and well-fitting Clothes are PEARLS which bring pleasure; poorly-made and ill-fitting garments, the PEBBLES which disappoint. One of the sweetest pleasures of a fond mother is to see her little one decked out in a stylish and becoming suit; for his lofty step, buoyant spirits and pretty face—beaming with smiles—fully repay his indulgent mother for the trivial expense of one of OUR BOYS' SUITS.
Our DISPLAY of BOYS' and CHILDREN'S SPRING SUITS, OVERCOATS and FURNISHINGS, as well as our CHILDREN'S SHIRT-WAISTS, etc., is as varied and HANDSOME and at the same time as REASONALE in PRICE as the most economical could wish.

Next Week's Attractions at the Theaters

Robson and Crane as The Two Dromios--McKee Rankin in "'49"--"Squatter Sovereignty"--"Alvin Joslyn"--Notes.

The farewell reëngagement of Salvini, presenting his great role of King Lear, has been the feature of the week in the dramatic world. The audiences at Pope's have been large and fashionable. At the matinee to-day the eminent Italian tragedian makes his last appearance, presenting "The Outlaw." This evening Mrs. W. L. B. G. Allen's play, "Hearts," will be offered at Pope's by the McCullough Club with the original cast and music. Some interest attaches to this home production. "The Romany Rye" has enjoyed a good second week's run at the Grand Opera-house. Annie Pixley played to substantial business at the Olympic. She appears at the matinee to-day in her new play, "Zara." For the farewell performance this evening "M'liss" will be the selection. Mr. and Mrs. George S. Knight appeared before the St. Louis public a second time this season, drawing good houses at the People's. "Otto" was the attraction for the early portion of the week, and 'Baron Rudolph" for the concluding performances. The managers' announcements for the coming week are set forth below:

GRAND OPERA-HOUSE.

To-morrow evening the popular comedians Robson and Crane appear at the Grand Opera-house as the two Dromios in Shakspeare's "Comedy of Errors." No pains or expense have been spared to give handsome stage effects to this performance. In that respect alone it is considered one of the brightest and best features of the present season. The old comedy is revived with faithful attention to detail. The costumes and groupings are said to be superb, and every scene is elaborately presented. Some very rich exterior and interior work has been specially prepared for the comedy revival by Mr. Richard Halley, the scenic artist of the Grand Opera-house. Robson and Crane have posed here before in the role of the Dromios, and it suffices to say that the performance is as droll as two master comedians can present. A brilliant engagement is assured for Robson and Crane during the coming week at the Grand Opera-house. As the Dromios they are inimitable.

THE OLYMPIC.

Mr. and Mrs. McKee Rankin will occupy the Olympic boards during the coming week. They appear in Leonard Grover's play, "'49," which has been improved and revised. The play is now presented in four acts. The first scene is laid at a lawyer's office in St. Louis; the second at a gambling house in Downieville, Col. There are two tableaux in the third act, showing '49's cabin and vicinity. The scene of the fourth act is located at the Lindell Hotel. Mr. McKee Rankin sustains the title role as before, and Mrs. Rankin appears in the role of Carrots, a red-haired waif. The Rankins come with a good support, and the play will be effectively mounted.

POPE'S.

At this house to-morrow evening "Squatter Sovereignty" will be the bill. Referring to its marked success in New York, an exchange says: Three weeks more and "Squatter Sovereignty," with all its roaring fun, its artistic goats, pigs, chicken, the big telescope, at tin cints a peep—yea, the great pianner itself, will have vanished like the insubstantial fabric of a dream. But it is unlike a dream, nevertheless. It is exceedingly substantial in this last morsel of Mr. Ed. Harrigan's dramatic feast. It is solid and profitable, and, on the road, it will be at once a boon of mirth and a blessing to the people outside of the metropolis who have through the past season had Pelion upon Ossa of murky melodrama, frigid tragedy, and senseless, clownish comic opera piled upon their wearied sense. They have had the various courses of farce, leg burlesque, extravaganza and shouting tragedians. Now in "Squatter Sovereignty" they will have the champagne, the cream, the fruit, the stilton of bright, crisp and sparkling jollity as wholesome, earnest and invigorating as it is pure and cleanly.

THE PEOPLE'S.

"Alvin Joslyn," a play of the New England farmer school, will be served up to the patrons of this popular theater on Sixth street for the week commencing to-morrow evening. Mr. Chas. L. Davis appears in the title role, supported by a good company.

THE ELKS' BENEFIT.

One of the most interesting events of the theatrical season, the annual matinee benefit of the St. Louis Lodge of Elks, is arranged to take place at the Grand Opera-house on Thursday afternoon of Easter week, March 29th. The Elk organization is the strongest in point of social influence of all the protective and benevolent societies in this city. Its membership is composed of the best professional and business elements, and in the order St. Louis Lodge ranks second to none in the country. The annual performance is always looked forward to as an occasion of surpassing interest, and it is graced with a brilliant and fashionable attendance. Lawrence Barrett, the eminent tragedian, will contribute to the programme; Manager John W. Norton, presiding officer of the lodge, and Mrs. Norton, Roland Reed and the "Cheek" Company, Mestayer's Tourists, Charles W. Pope and a host of talent will be included in this grand special bill. Mr. and Mrs. Norton make their only appearance this season at the benefit. The seats will be auctioned off at the Grand Opera-house on Easter Monday at 1 o'clock, by Roland Reed.

NOTES.

The Natatorium, Nineteenth and Pine streets, remains open for roller-skating on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings and Saturday afternoon.

Sackett's Dime Museum, 13 South Fifth street, is crowded with curiosities. It is an excellent exhibition. The parlors are open from 1 till 10 o'clock p. m.

Carrie Turner plays "Hazel Kirke" with the original company in Effie Ellsler's place, and is a most charming actress. She played leading parts with Jas. O'Neill last season.

The Dime Museum, Fourth and Walnut streets, presents a new and attractive bill next week. There are performances afternoon and evening. A band concert is given free every afternoon.

The Museum of Fine Arts, Lucas place, has been well attended throughout the week. The statuary, painting, and special loan collection of water colors can be viewed every day from 9:30 a. m. to 5:30 p. m. and on Tuesday and Friday evenings from 7:30 to 10 o'clock.

Archie Boyd, an old St. Louis favorite, will have a benefit at the Olympic Thursday night. Mr. Boyd is a member of McKee Rankin's company, playing comedy parts, and Mr. and Mrs. Rankin and the entire combination will appear in "'49" at the benefit performance.

Callender's Consolidated Colored Spectacular Minstrels follow "Squatter Sovereignty" at Pope's. The company numbers over fifty people, men, women, children and a bantam, including Billy Kersands, of the capacious mouth; Ed. Bowen, Edmund Johnson, Billy Green, Louis Brown, Wallace King, the tenor, D. Little, Taylor Green, Woodson, Bob Mack, etc., under the management of Frohman Bros.

Mhowah Brandy.

From a New York Sun Letter.

For some time past the French custom authorities have remarked large quantities of some dry fruit landed from ships engaged in the Indian trade. This fruit is about the size of a cherry, but brown in color, and with the taste of bad sweet raisins. An investigation showed that this fruit was the flower of the Indian tree, the mhowah, and that it is imported by the manufacturers of wine, who mix it with ordinary grapes. It has been estimated that not less than 300,000 kilograms of these mhowah flowers were imported into France during the first six months of 1882. This tree is a native of India, where it is held in high esteem. In April the tree loses its leaves, and suddenly a large number of clusters of flowers burst out in the branches. These flowers are like fruits rather than blossoms, and they fall to the ground as soon as they ripen. One tree will produce as much as 200 kilograms of these flowers. Among the Gounds and Bhlis, the people living where the mhowah grows, the tree is looked upon almost as a divinity. It is under its shade that all their important meetings are held, it is upon its branches that they hang their votive offerings, and it is between its roots that they spread out the mysterious circles of flints which, with them, take the place of idols. For the savages the flower of the mhowah is a real manna. When dried they knead it into a cake, or make a paste of it, or grind into flour. By fermentation they make a very pleasant, clear wine from it, which is well known by the English soldiers quartered in India. The English physicians assert that the wine and alcohol distilled from the mhowa hare very dangerous, having many of the attributes of absinthe, and cause similar effects on the brain. Many cases of madness in India are laid to the account of the mhowah, and on this account the French authorities do not look favorably upon the importation of the flower into France.

Frisky General Sherman.

From M. Halstead's New York Letter.

General Sherman and Secretary Sherman were in the city this morning, as happy together as when they were children. If anybody supposes the General is worrying because he approaches the period when he is to be placed on the retired list, it is a mistake. The General feels like taking a holiday. I am not so sure about the retirement of men in full vigor of life to make way for the boys. Perhaps the boys should make their own way, and be content in time of peace with slow progress. In time of war promotion is rapid enough, and, when there is no fighting to do, warriors should compose themselves according to the conditions. I should say General Sherman was as well able to-day to ride from the Ohio to the Atlantic Ocean and over the old road of Cornwallis from South Carolina through Virginia, as ever he was. He is the one very distinguished man in the United States who does not seem to have any hunger for the fatigues and fatness of the Presidency. He is the one citizen of the United States who may fairly be suspected of ability to refuse to accept the Presidency.

READ THE WANT COLUMNS.

Land-Slides.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

Rev. Joseph Shanks, who lives on Little River and who is well known in Wilkes county, tells of a most remarkable land-slide on the river bank on his place. It occurred during the recent wet spell. At the point at which the slide occurred the river bank is about low water mark. A body of earth 150 feet long and forty-eight feet wide slid from Wilkes into McDuffie county—or, rather, it slid into the river and changed the current entirely. The most of this slide is intact now, and the entire river is on this side of it, whereas it was before on the other side. This slide parted from a field that was planted in corn last year, and took off twelve corn rows and eight or ten good-sized trees, one of the trees measuring two feet in diameter. Most of the trees are now standing erect, but they are in McDuffie county.

FASHION NOTES.

Long pelisses will be much worn.

The favorite Paris bonnet is the very close capote.

Even in Paris spring styles are not very definitely settled.

Lace frills and ruches, black, white and ecru, will be much worn.

The rabbit is the prominent object in all the Easter shop windows.

The redingote plays an important part in Paris fashions this spring.

Spots of plush appliqué on plain goods are favored by English dressmakers.

Birds' nests in every variety of form are favorite Easter gifts for little folks.

Black lace bonnets covered with many frills of black lace will be much worn.

The dolman effect is much sought for in all the new wraps thst are not jackets or pelisses.

Velveteen is much worn by first-class English women, but it must be first-quality velveteen.

The dressiest silk wraps are dolman visites and mantles of rich Ottoman silk, plain or brocaded.

The American Easter cards excel the English this year in originality of design and artistic finish.

Cats are the fashionable animals at present, and cat-head and cat-paw ornaments are in high favor.

Brown and dark, almost invisible green, are favorite colors for spring wraps, when of woolen cloths.

Large pouf crowns and pleated brims are features in some of the most becoming spring bonnets.

Merinos are again in favor, and, combined with velvet, bid fair to rival cloth for dressy street costumes.

The new wraps, pelerines, scarfs, dolmans and visites are all made bouffant on the top of the shoulders.

An eccentric fancy is to cut the ends of all ribbon bows, strings and sashes into long forks or notches.

The most elegant ball dresses—to be worn after Lent, of course—are of embroidered tulle over silk and satin.

A fancy for the moment is to decorate the ends of plain satin sash ribbons for evening wear with bead embroideries.

Raglans, Havelocks, jackets of kinds, dolman visities and old-fashioned mantles will all be worn as the spring advances.

The new fraises and ruches for the neck are very wide and full, and are nearly a yard long, so as to form a jabot down the front.

A moderate quantity of new brocaded or plaided or checked silk converts an old mervellieux satin dress into a handsome spring costume.

The new bonnets, trimmed with upright frills of gathered lace, bows of ribbon with forked ends, and many small flowers, look very aspiring and defiant.

The trimmings of new spring wraps are sleek chenille fringes, guipure and soutache laces, braids, passementeries, cords, tassels, and metal buckles and slides.

Tambourines of all sizes in white and colored silk are utilized for Easter gifts by an appropriate design and motto painted on the face, while the back is covered with a reticule top and filled with bonbons.

From a Paris correspondent we learn that costumes of all periods in the classic, middle age Renaissance, Restoration and Directory styles are still worn, and will continue to be worn in Europe for at least two seasons more.

THE CHURCHES.

Week's Summary of News in Religious Circles.

Sabbath Sermons--Sunday Texts--Pastoral Points--General News and Gossip.

The news of the week in religious circles is given below:

The young men of the Lutheran churches of the city have organized a society under the name of the Dr. Martin Luther Denckmal Gesellschaft, the purpose of which is to raise means sufficient to erect a monument in this city to the great reformer Dr. Martin Luther.

CHRISTIAN.

B. W. Johnson, of the Christian-Evangelist editorial staff, has gone to Chicago to spend the Sabbath

Rev. W. T. Tibbs, who has been sick for some days, has gone to New Orleans to spend three or four weeks in rest and recuperation. Bro. J. H. Smith will preach for him to-morrow morning.

Dr. Teasdale, of Columbus, Miss., will preach for Dr. Foy to-morrow evening, and Bro. J. H. Garrison, of the Christian-Evangelist, will conduct the other services of the evening. In the morning Dr. Foy will take for his subject "Modern methods of exorcising evil."

CATHOLIC.

Next Sunday will be Palm Sunday. The passion will be read at all the masses.

Father O'Shea, assisted by Father Smith, of the Assumption, has been appointed Chaplain for the Carmelite Nuns.

The mission at the Church of the Visitation will close on next Sunday. Father Daily will preach the panegyric at the last mass.

Father Foly, who was ordained last week, has been appointed assistant at St. Patrick's. Father McCaffery will have three assistants.

At a recent election of the Young Men's Sodality, St. Bridget's parish, the following officers were selected for the ensuing year: W. E. Foley, prefect; W. J. Black, first assistant; Jas. E. Sullivan, second assistant; Arthur Boyce, treasurer; W. F. Mulhall, secretary; C. M. Hunt, assistant secretary; D. J. Brennan and D. J. Sullivan, marshals; Thomas L. Conly and R. J. Hickey, sacristans; Paul F. Gentry and John Fitzgibbon, librarians; Thomas Meehan, Michael Gralton, P. J. McGuire, J. T. Reilly, J. F. Meagher, A. W. Depres, C. F. Cosgrove, Wm. F. Riley, M. Birmingham, W. J. Corrigan, W. J. Sullivan, J. E. McCollins, consultors. Rev. J. J. Harty, spiritual director.

METHODIST, SOUTH.

Dr. McAnally continues indisposed, but is still able to be about and attend to his editorial work.

Special protracted services have been held every night this week at Centenary Church and will be continued next week.

Dr. Tudor will take for his to-morrow morning's subject: "Youth viewed from the standpoint of middle life." Rev. John Hogan will occupy the pulpit in the evening at 7:45.

Rev. Jesse Bird, of St. Joseph, Mo., one of the oldest Methodist ministers of the Southwest, passed through the city yesterday on his way home from Kentucky, where he has been treated for cancer. He is almost recovered.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The ladies of the Third Church give a pound party and sociable in the parlors of the Church on next Tuesday evening.

Rev. J. W. Scroggs, of Vinita, I. T., has gone east hoping to obtain means with which to finish the Worcester Academy at Vinita.

Rev. J. G. Merrill, pastor of the Delmar avenue Church, will hold special meetings on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings next.

At tht meeting of the trustees of Drury College, held in this city last Wednesday, Rev. Henry Hopkins, of Kansas City, was elected to fill the position vacated by the death of Hon. S. F. Drury.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of Plymouth Church meets next Wednesday evening in the ladies' parlors of the church, and the Chautauqua L. & S. C. meets Monday evening in the same place.

Dr. Goodell will preach as usual to-morrow morning at Pilgrim Church. A five-minutes children's sermon will constitute a part of the services. A song-service will be held in the evening. The congregational singing will be led by a cornet in connection with the choir.

BAPTIST.

Dr. Thomas C. Teasdale will preach at the Garrison Avenue Church to-morrow morning.

Rev. Dr. James, president of Judsonia University, has resigned and will devote his time to the ministry.

On next Wednesday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock a children's service will be held in the chapel of the Second Church.

Rev. J. D. Biggs, if well enough, will preach his farewell sermon to-morrow morning. He will locate in Louisiana, Mo.

Rev. B. Thomas has returned to Little Rock, the physicians whom he has consulted not thinking him able to undergo a removal of the cancer from his mouth.

Dr. Lofton will preach at the Park Avenue Church to-morrow morning on "The Mustard-seed Faith." In the evening his theme will be "The Seared Conscience." At the close of the evening service the ordinance of baptism will be administered.

Special meetings will be held at the Park Avenue Church on Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday evenings. The series of nightly meetings will be resumed the following week, upon the arrival of Rev. Mr. Parser, and his brother, who will assist Dr. Lofton.

There will be seven persons baptized at Dr. Boyd's church to-morrow morning, the sermon selected in the morning being "The Grandeur of Human Speech." In the evening the subject of the Doctor's lectures will be "The Phenomenon of Conversion."

Elaborate preparations are making for Easter services at the Second Church, the morning of Easter Sabbath. A special programme of music will be given in connection with an Easter sermon, and in the evening there will be an Easter carol service by the children.

On last Thursday evening Dr. Boyd lectured at the St. Louis Seminary at Jennings' Station. A deep religious interest is manifested among the students, and the school under its president, Dr. Blewett, is in a most prosperous condition.

On last Wednesday evening at the Second Church a most interesting service was held. About a dozen little children, between the ages of six and eight, members of the Band of Willing Workers, presented an exercise under the direction of their teacher, Mrs. A. M. Averill, after which the Rev. Dr. Teasdale, nearly eighty years of age, addressed the meeting, thus showing the two extremes of human life in vivid contrast.

METHODIST.

All the ministers are absent from the city and in attendance at the annual conference at Clinton. Arrangements for the filling of their pulpits on the morrow have not been publicly made yet, but it is assured that the pulpits will be filled in every case. Considerable interest is being felt in the changes in pastors that may be made by the conference but no special feeling appears in any of the congregations except it be in the Central, where it is said some petty misunderstandings amongst the members exists. It is also stated their present pastor, Rev. Mr. Beggs, will not be returned by the conference. Rev. C. P. Masden, of Scranton, Pa., who is to succeed Dr. Felton at Union Church, will not be here for work before the first Sabbath in April, but in the meantime his pulpit will be ably filled. Mr. Marsden comes highly recommended, and the good people of Union Church, while disliking very much the loss to them of Dr. Felton, feel greatly favored in securing in his successor so able a minister.

EPISCOPAL.

Bishop Robertson will be at Christ Church to-morrow morning, and at Grace Church in the evening.

Preliminary steps are being taken for the organization of another Episcopal congregation in Kansas City. If successful, it will be the fifth in that city.

Rev. Mr. Betts will, on next Wednesday evening, at Trinity Chapel, deliver the last of the Lenten lectures before the Congregation of the Church of the Good Samaritan.

The programme of the uuited services of the Episcopal congregations of the city during Holy Week will be as follows, the subjects for discourse at each meeting being appropriate to the events of that day as recorded in the Scriptures: Monday evening, at Grace Church, preacher Rev. Custis P. Jones; subject, "Nothing but Leaves: The Cursing of the Barren Fig Tree." Tuesday evening at Church of the Holy Communion, preacher, Rev. C. E. D. Griffith; subject, "The Temple Abandoned and Desolate." Wednesday evening at Mt. Calvary Church, preacher Rev. B. F. Newton; subject, "The Forty Pieces of Silver." Thursday evening at Christ Church, "No Summer." United celebration of the holy communion, on the establishment of this religious institution. Good Friday evening, at the Church of the Good Shepherd; preacher, Rev. Theo. De Forrest; subject, "Our Lord on the Cross." These services begin in each case at 7:45 p. m.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The morning offering in the Second Church last Sabbath for missions amounted to $1,400.

Rev. H. S. Williams at North Church to-morrow morning will preach on "Consecrations."

Rev. Mr. Van der Lippe has been confined to his room by illness brought on by overwork in revival exercises.

The Gospel services at Washington and Compton Avenue Church have been continued through the week, led by Mr. Pearson.

Rev. L. H. Long, of the Presbytery of Cincinnati, en route to Colorado, spent a day among friends in the city during the week.

Considerable regligious interest is manifested among the students of Lindenwood College, twenty-five having professed conversion within a short time.

Dr. Niccolls went to Hot Springs Tuesday, and report says dedicated a church at that place some time during the week, but general mystery surrounds the visit.

Rev. J. T. Valentine will preach at Ferguson, Sabbath morning. Dr. Cooper at Glasgow Avenue Church in the morning. Dr. Porteus in the evening, and Dr. J. W. Allen at Sparta, Ill. Dr. Marquis returned from New York Thursday and will occupy his own public pulpit to-morrow as usual.

A series of special meetings will be inaugurated at the North Church, next Tuesday evening. Dr. Niccolls, Boyd, Ganse and other ministers of the city have promised to aid in the work. It is the intention of the pastor, Rev. H. S. Williams, to continue the services two weeks and close with communion the first Sabbath in April.

Y. M. C. A.

Mr. Douglass, the Secretary, will conduct a down town gospel service at the Y. M. C. A. to-morrow evening for strangers and down town people.

The Central Union Sunday-school will hold their first public anniversary exercises at the Y. M. C. A. Hall on Tuesday evening, at which an interesting programme will be presented.

Prof. Richards will give his closing lecture at the Y. M. C. A. this evening upon the wonders of the sun. The lecture will comprise a trip to the sun and back by bed-time and will be illustrated by the most costly and beautiful experiments. He has the most expensive instruments and this lecture is described as being of surpassing interest and instructive.

Prof. Richards, of Chicago, the eminent scientist, who has been giving a brilliant series of scientific lectures this week under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., will conduct the gospel service at the Y. M. C. A. Hall, on Eleventh and Locust streets, to-morrow, at 4 p. m. He will deliver an address on "Scientific Scepticism," and discuss it upon its own grounds. His ability as a lecturer and scientific knowledge peculiarly fit him for the task, and a great treat may be expected, as well by Christians as by all interested in truth. The lecture will be free to the public.

How Wagner Composed.

(Leipsig Cov. N. Y. Post.)

Richard Wagner composed, like all great musicians, in his brain, and not, is often imagined, at the piano. It is a delight to examine a manuscript composition from his his hand—to see how complete and well-rounded, how ripe and finished everything sprung from his head. Changes are very rarely found in such a manuscript; even in the boldest harmonies and most difficult combinations, not a slip of the pen occurs. In the entire score of "Tannhauser," which Wagner wrote out himself from beginning to end in chemical ink, not one correction is to be found. One note followed the other with easy rapidity. It was his habit to write the musical sketch in pencil—in Bayreuth music-paper was to be found in every corner of "Wahnfried," on which, while wandering about the house during sleepless nights, musing and planning, he made brief jottings, often merely a new idea in instrumentation. The rest was in his head; the vocal parts were added to the score without hesitation, and never needed correction. For the orchestra he employed three staves, one of which was reserved for special notes, as, for instance, when a particular instrument was to enter. From these sketches the vocal parts could be written out immediately, although the instrumentation was by no means finished. Such sketches were carefully collected by Frau Cosima, who tried for a time to fix the notes permanently by drawing the pen through them. This task was, however, soon abandoned. In its stead she grasped the idea of making a collection of all Wagner's manuscripts, to be deposited in "Wahnfried." For many years she has conducted an extended correspondence for the purpose of obtaining, for love or money, the scattered treasures, and has in a great measure—principally through the use of the latter persuasive—succeeded.

Thieves With a Girl Captain.

From the Los Angeles (Cal.) Times.

In the neighborhood of Sixth street there is a gang of little hoodlums who have become the terror of that vicinity. They have operated there for some time, but recently they have begun to branch out and extend the circle of their adventures. It seems like a dime novel story, but the captain of the gang is a girl. They are regularly organized, and had begun business under rather favorable circumstances. On the day Mr. Lothian was buried the captain and some of her pals entered the lumber office at Walsh's yard, San Pedre street, and took whatever their fancy dictated. They became possessed of a diamond glass-cutter and cut a pane of glass from Lazarus' show window. They also stole some things from Hellmann's notion store. The police got after them, and Monday one of the little McDonald boys was arrested. Yesterday Officer Fletcher was detailed to arrest others of the gang, and succeeded in bringing in four. Now, what on earth is to be done with the children? The oldest of them is the girl captain; she is about 13, and the others range down to 10. Two of the boys are Johnnie and Willie McDonald, whose father murdered their mother, and is now in San Quentin; another is a colored boy named Smiley; the captain is Nellie Devine, and her younger brother is a member of the gang.

UNION BIBLE STUDY.

The First Christian Martyr--Lesson, Acts 7: 54-60, and 8: 1-4.

By Rev. W. W. Boyd, Every Saturday at 4 P. M. in Y. M. C. A. Hall.

The opponents of Stephen (Acts vi :9-10) could not overpower him by argument, and, therefore, changed into relentless persecutors, they would put him down by force. Having privately instigated and instructed false witnesses against him, they created a popular excitement and thus furnished the scribes and rulers with the occasion they doubtless desired. Stephen is seized unawares, brought before the Sanhedrim and charged with seeking to subvert Jewish customs and rights. His position is exceedingly trying. One against many, utterly in their power, any attempt at conciliation, had it been in his case right, would have been useless. A bold defense was his only alternative. And this he makes in a speech of great dignity and power (Acts vii: 1-53), in which he recounts God's dealings with Israel and Israel's conduct in return, and proves, especially in the cases of Joseph and Moses, the ingratitude and baseness of the people in their treatment of Gad's servants. Then, suddenly changing his tone, he addressed his hearers with irrepressible indignation and a flaming zeal, charging them with murdering the true Joshua, or Jesus. It is disputed whether Stephen finished his speech or not. The abruptness of its close, and the rage of the Jews at that moment, seem to indicate that he was interrupted by the furious clamor of his foes now eager to slay him. His speech results in his

HEROIC DEATH.

Acts vii: 54-60. (54) Now, when they heard these things, they were cut to the heart, and they gnashed on him with their teeth. (55) But he, being full of the Holy Spirit, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, (56) and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God. (57) But they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and rushed upon him with one accord; (58) and they cast him out of the city, and stoned him; and the witnesses laid down their garments at the feet of a young man named Saul. (59) And they stoned Stephen, calling upon the Lord, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. (60) And he kneeled down and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this he fell asleep.

"When they," the people, as well as the Sanhedrim, "heard these things," the terrible, stinging charges with which Stephen's address concluded (verses 51-53), "they were cut to the heart," literally "they were sawn through" (an expression of the keenest anguish followed by wrath). See Acts v:33. They were convicted, but not converted. Instead of exclaiming, "what must we do to be saved?" they "gnashed on him with their teeth" with intense indignation and hate. Their frenzy, too violent for words, vented itself after the manner of a ferocious, chained dog whom one attempts to release. Compare Job xvi: 9; Psalm xxxvii: 12; Matthew viii: 12; xiii:42.

"But he," with sublime calmness, nothing moved by their rage, because "full of the Holy Spirit," and therefore strengthened and exalted by the divine presence (Acts, iv: 8), "looked up steadfastly into heaven." His gaze was fixed not on their enraged countenances, but above, where his crown was laid up and in readiness. To his intent and uplifted spirit this scene in heaven was revealed: (1) "the glory of God," the shekinah, or celestial brightness in which God himself appears; (Ex. xxv: 22; xl: 34; Heb., ix: 5); and (2) "Jesus standing on the right hand of God."

It was a vision addressed not to his senses, but to his mind's eye. It had, however, to all the face of an objective reality; and though no one else in the company could see what he saw, like a bold confessor he declares all that he beholds: "I see the heavens open"—as if to receive me—"and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God."

The title, "Son of man," was one often used by the Savior of himself. (Matt. viii: 20.) It describes him from the human side. After this incident we find it in the New Testament only twice (Rev. i; 13: xiv: 4). This view of the glorified humanity of Christ was specially sented to the need of Stephen. It was a fulfillment of Christ's own words (Mat. xxvi: 64). Mark where Jesus is: "on the right hand of God," the place of power and honor. Note his posture: "standing," in the attitude of approval and protection, expressing "the eager interest with which from his mediatorial throne he watched the scene in that council chamber, and the full tide of his Spirit, which he was engaged at that moment in pouring into the heart of his heroical witness, till it beamed in radiance from his very countenance." Compare Ps. cx: 1; Mark xvii: 19; Eph. i: 20; Col. iii: 1; Heb. i: 3; viii: 1; x: 12; xii: 2. Thus Stephen declares to the council that the exaltation of Christ, which his enemies should hereafter behold to their dismay, was already begun. The crucified Christ was already in the place of power, exalted to supreme dominion.

No wonder their fury became unbounded, their decorum no longer restrained. The judges and witnesses themselves became executioners; the council, an excited mob. To men of their character and spirit, the heavely words of Stephen could only bring matters to one issue: "They cried out with a loud voice"—charging him to be silent, or demanding his death—"and stopped their ears"—shutting out the truth they could not answer, and were unwilling to admit—"and rushed upon him with one accord," tumultuously, with not a single voice raised to preserve order, or in the name of justice. A frantic outburst of lawless rage, it is evident; because Stephen had not been legally condemned, or, if he had been, the Jews, under the Roman law, had no power to inflict the penalty of death without the sanction of the Procurator. (John xviii:31.) The whole proceedings, therefore, according to their own customs, were illegal and unjustifible.

The manner of his death was harsh in the extreme. "They cast him out of the city," dragging him beyond the city wall, as the Mosaic law required to be done in cases of blasphemy (Lev. xxiv: 14; Num. xv: 35; 1. Kings xxi: 13; Heb. xiii: 12-13), and proceeded to stone him, this being the Jewish penalty for blasphemy and other grave crimes (Ex. xix: 13; Deut. xvii: 5; Josh. vii: 25). "And the witnesses"—who, according to the law, must begin the work of death (Deut. xvii: 7; John viii: 7)—"laid down their garments at the feet of a young man named Saul." The garments were laid aside to afford them greater freedom of action in their bloody work, and were laid at Saul's feet to be safely guarded. "In the conduct of these witnesses we observe a fragment of legality—a faint effort to invest a mere outbreak of mob violence with the character of formal justice."

And now the murderous work begins. The witnesses having cast the first stones, the multitude joins in. Inveterate hate has its fill of cruel revenge. But Stephen, the victim, what of him? Prayerful, forgiving, calm, confiding, interceding is his spirit. "Calling upon the Lord"—whom he beholds on God's right hand—he prays, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." He prays directly to Christ. He addresses him as "Lord." As Jesus himself commended his spirit to the Father (Luke xxiii:46), so Stephen, the disciple, in turn commends his spirit to the Son. And then in the intense fervor and earnestness of his prayer "he kneeled down and cried with a loud voice"—with something of the energy of his dying Lord (John xix: 30)—"Lay not this sin to their charge," an echo of the prayer of the dying Christ, (Luke xxiii: 34), a beautiful example of his spirit. "No parallel to this prayer of Stephen can be found out of Christian history."

"And when he had said this he fell asleep." A beautiful expression for death, denoting the peace of the dying Christian and his hope of a glorious resurrection Heathen writers sometimes speak of death as a sleep, but the word "cemetery," or sleeping-place, where the body sleeps in the hope of a resurrection, is distinctively a Christian word. Compare also John xi: 11; I Cor. xv: 18; Psalm cxxvii: 2.

SEED THOUGHTS.

1. Inflamed passion makes brutes of men. V. 54.

2. The death of saints is precious in the sight of Christ. Heaven stands open to receive such as earth rejects; and to them is granted by the exalted Redeemer, even in death, a glimpse of the glory that awaits them. V. 55.

3. A martyr's glorious vision reveals where and what Christ now is. In the place of power an intercessor, pleading our cause, eager in his sympathy towards us and ready to help. Vss. 56-57.

4. The prayer of prayers for a dying hours. Polycarp, Huss, Luther, Cromwell, and thousands of others have uttered it as death drew near. V. 59.

5. It is our privilege to pray, like Stephen, directly to Christ. That the first Christians called on Jesus is evident from Acts ix: 14-21; xxii: 16; Rom. x: 12; I. Cor. i: 2; Phil. ii: 10, V 59.

6. "What a religion is that which teaches men to pray for their murderers in the very spirit as well as the words of Christ (Mat. v: 44), who was the First to exemplify his own precept. (Luke xxiii: 34.) And what a harvest of such has the Church of Christ produced—from the days of Stephen down to the martyrs of Madagascar in our own day—showing that Jesus lives in his people still, returning in his suffering servants blessing for cursing!" Forgiveness of injuries is the true Christian revenge. v. 60.

THE FIRST GENERAL PERSECUTION.

Acts viii: 1-4. And Saul was consenting unto his death. And there arose on that day a great persecution against the church which was in Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles. (2) And devout men buried Stephen, and made great lamentation over him. (3) But Saul laid waste the church, entering into every house, and dragging away men and women committed them to prison. (4) They therefore that were scattered abroad went about preaching the word.

The first sentence really closes the preceding chapter: "And Saul was consenting unto his death." Saul, afterwards Paul the great apostle to the Gentiles, doubtless was a member of the Cilician Synagogue mentioned in acts vi:9-10, and one of the chief disputants with Stephen. He was "a young man," probably about thirty years of age, and a decided enemy of the Christians. (Acts vii: 58.) Though not participating directly in the act of murdering Stephen, yet he "consented" to it, approved it. The Greek word conveys more than mere "consent" (compare Luke xi: 48; Rom. i: 32; I. Cor. vii: 12, 13). Paul himself confesses his great guilt in this case in Acts xxii: 20, and Luke here records probably a confession which he had often heard from Paul's own lips. How malignant was his spirit at this time is seen from the fact (v. iii) that he "laid waste the church," by "entering into every house"—that is, taking the disciples house by house, "and, dragging away men and women, committed them to prison." How furious and bitter was his persecution of the Christians is seen from his own confessions (Acts xxvi: 9; ix: 2; xxii: 4; xxvi: 10-11; ix: 13-21; Gal. i: 13.) But the fury of this young man was yet to be changed into most intense zeal for Christ and his church. And, as has been said, "We cannot dissociate the martyrdom of Steven from the conversion of Paul. The spectacle of so much constancy, so much faith, so much love could not be lost. It is hardly too much to say with Augustine, that "the church owes Paul to the prayer of Stephen."

But Saul was not the only persecutor. "On that day," the very day of Stephen's death, the whole body of Christians at Jerusalem felt the keen hate of their enemies. Large numbers of believers were driven from the city, and sought places of refuge in Judea and Samaria. The apostles, however, stood to their work unmoved; partly because they would not quit the post of duty and danger; partly because, doubtless, the chief persecution was directed against the Hellenistic party, of which Stephen was a member, and therefore left the apostles comparatively untroubled.

In contrast to the persecuting hate of the dominant party appears the conduct of certain "devout men," pious Jews, who, impressed, it may be, with admiration for Stephen, and secretly inclined to the new faith, but having neither the courage nor the ability to prevent his death, nevertheless dared to give him burial, just as Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus did for Christ, "and made great lamentation over him," as expressed in the Oriental way of clapping the hands or smiting on the breast.

In contrast also to the wrath of man's purpose in the death of Stephen and the persecution of the church, shines forth the purpose of God, who would overrule all this hellish rage of man for the spread of the "good news." For this was the result: "They therefore that were scattered abroad went about preaching the Word." Persecution gave rise to Christian mission. The blood of the first martyr became the seed of a great spiritual harvest. (Acts i: 8; xi: 19-21.) "Instead of having their hopes dashed and their energies crushed, the scattered disciples found their field of vision and of action only enlarged and brightened. As their hold on Jerusalem, with all its ancient associations and endearments, got loosened, it was only to disclose to them something of the more extended career on which the church was about to enter." The persecuted fugitives became Christ's ambassadors to lost men.

"Flung to the needless winds
Or on the waters cast,
Their ashes shall be watched,
And gathered at the last;
And from that scattered dust,
Around us and abroad,
Shall spring a plenteous seed
Of witnesses for God."

CHEAPER THAN POSTAGE—OUR WANT COLUMNS—20 WORDS FOR 10 CENTS.

A Kentucky Gentleman.

Eli Perkins in Chicago Tribune.

A gentleman is a mysterious being down in Kentucky. I've often heard Kentuckians say: "By Gad, sah, I'm a gen'leman!" but I never knew what it meant till to-day. The clerk at the Kentucky hotel met the passengers at the cars. He was soliciting customers for the hotel. He was a ponderous man, and a handsome man, too, as are all Kentuckians. He did not shout rudely, as do Northern porters:

"Burnett House! Carriage!!"

"Palmer House! Free 'bus!!"

He simply walked up as if you were the guest of the city, and remraked:

"Sah, I should be glad to show you to a hotel, sah, the finest in the city—the Palace, sah! I'm a gentleman, sah, and I will treat you right."

I hesitated a little about handing my portmanteau to a seedy-looking menial to carry, when the landlord said:

"Let him carry it, sah. He's a gen'leman. He'll take good care of it, sah. Perfectly safe, sah."

"Yes," remarked the landlord, as we walked up the hill, "that man carrying your bag is a gen'leman, sah. Why, say, he was once worth $200,000; had seventy niggers and 700 acres of the best blue-grass land in Kentucky."

"What became of it, sir?" I asked.

"Drank it all up, sah. Fast horses, and fast woman, and whisky got away with it all, sah. And poker had a heap to do with it, too. That man lost $4,000 and a 2:20 horse in one night. Oh, sah, he's got gen'lemanly instincts, he has, sure's yer bo'ne. He's poor and ragged and dirty, and bloated with whisky, and all falling to pieces like—a perfect wreck, but he's a gen'leman! He won't steal your carpet-bag!"

TRAGIC LOVE.

[The following story was written expressly for the POST-DISPATCH by a young and ambitious man named John Black, of South St. Louis. He left with us two of his productions, and we chose this as the best specimen of his rapidly-developing mind.—ED. P.-D.]

It was a dreary day, as Maud Lester sat moodily gazing into the fire. Her very looks toled that something was wrong. Maud was a beautiful and accomplished young lady who had scoers of admiers, who had sote for her hand in vain. There was only one man that she cared for but her pride would not allow her to acknowlage it as she was one of the richest bells in S——r. Will Wayland was an honest, kind-harted fellow whose love might have done honor to Maud Lester but alas she did not know it. She thought that all men cared for her was for her money. There was going to bee a grand ball that night at the Wain Mancion. The house was aglow from basement to garret the crowd had arrived and the merry-making was at its hight. Upon the grand stair-case was a pair engaged in earnest conversation. So you are going away to-morrow? Yes Maud I shall have to go I could not stay here and know that I could never win you for my own I shall go now if fortune ever favers me I will come back again. O do not talk that way Will you make me feel uneasy. Then you do care a little for me do you Maud. I care for you but—but—. But I am a poor man you would say, I understand I am not one blest with fortune but thank God I am blest with an honest hart and a strong pair of hands but untill I I shall gain my farm and fortune I will bid you farewell. Poor Maud sank down weak and trembling [illegible] said I did not mean to hurt feelings and so futher convesation was stoped by the anoncement of another dance thay danced the set out and some one come and claimed her for a stroll and that was the last he seen of her for years. When Maud once more was alone in her room her thoughts were anything but pleasant. The more she thought the moor wreached she became. At last she exclaimed, I do love him O fool that I was to let him go but my pride would be crushed. But alas fair maid thy love is crushed. She is not seen in soiety as much as she used to and latter she has reclined to receive visitor. Poor thing she is fading fast. But let us follow our hero. Sitting in one of the Western railroad engines he wheels the express along her steel track his mind is not an idle one he has been studieing a plan by witch he can stop a train within her own lenth and by the kind help of the Supt. of the road it is tried and found to bee a very grate advancement to all rail-roads and is patented and thus secured in the name of Will Waland.

All the west is starteled with the news, William Waland is no more a poor engineer, but is becoming vastly rich by his wonderful discovery. He will now be able to go back and claim the prise prize he has so long been working for. He will now be able to say Maud, my darling, I have worked these long years for thy love can I have it? And so he started for what he called home, little dreaming the sad sad news that awaited him. As he reached the town his heart beat light as he thought how soon he would meet his idoled image. Loud and shrill blew the whistle, and his well-trained ear knew what it meant, so gathering his things up he got off at S——r City and walking directly for a hotel he heard something so sad and low it made his blood turn cold, it was the toll of a death bell. How strange it made him feel, he had often heard the death bells, but it had never made him feel so before. It is only a fancy he sadi to himself, but alas he finds it was not a fancy. At any rate he thought he would go over and find out if possible who was dead. As he stood in front of the church he asked one of the hackmen who was dead. I do not know the young lady's name, but she died from grief. It seems that about five years ago she fell in love with a man, a poor man, who went out West and she has b en dying ever since. Will's heart stood still. Stand aside sir, here they come with the coffin. Will was trembling from head to foot. O, God, it could not be true. With fearful forebodings he asked one of the friends of the dead, her name.

Maud Lester. My God! My God! Cried poor Wayland O what have I done that I have been punished O wreched man that I am. The scean presented at that burial was truly heart-rendering. Poor Will was one of the most wreched men alive. After the excitement was over it was ascertained that after long years of waiting and suspense poor Maud faded away like a rose. When Wayland heard this he went raving mad and the hair on his head turned white in six nights. He had to be put in a lunitic assylum where he died in a short time with a raving fever. Poor fellow is dead now but the memories of that terrible night are still fresh in my memory and so ends our trigic love story

The New Mrs. Sprague.

From the Columbus (O.) Times.

Last Thursday the wires brought the surprising news that Rhode Island's noted Governor and bankrupt had married at Staunton, Va., Mrs. Dora Inez Calvert, the divorced wife of Frank Calvert, a salesman for the shirt factory of A. J. Clark & Co., at Cincinnati, her maiden name being Weed. Mrs. Calvert was divorced but the Monday before her marriage. Readers of the Times will remember the trial here of Clarence Howard, alias Hayslip, in the Common Pleas Court, in January, on an indictment charging him with robbing his room-mate of $40. The defense was that Howard had merely hidden the money as a joke. With the prisoner sat a petite lady, elegantly dressed, and so handsome as to excite universal remark. Her tears were near the surface, and she wept dramatically. She was a witness in the case. The jury disagreed and the boy was released on bond. The pretty woman had a neat foot which it seemed that she was fond of displaying. This was Mrs. Gov. Sprague, the second. She had left her home at Guyandotte, West Virginia, to succor her brother here, Clarence Weed. Her family knew nothing of her mission. She went to Cincinnati and brought with her another sister who was so crushed by the shame of her brother that she had to be taken home. Mrs. Calvert again came back and stayed through the trial and signed the bond. Her former husband used to keep a grocery at Portsmouth. His brother was formerly Probate Judge there. To an old acquaintance here who recognized her in the court-room, she then spoke kindly of her husband and promised to convey to him the regards of the speaker. Even then her divorce suit must have been pending. Frank Calvert is about fifty years old and his wife was but twenty-five. Persons will not have to cudgel their brains out to recall the little lady at the trial.

A Careless Trick.

From the Wall Street News.

Last fall a Baltimore hardware dealer, who had a bill against a blacksmith in an adjacent village, sent it out by his collector for payment. Upon arriving at the village the collector found the shop, but not the smith, and after a long hunt discovered him on his own door-step, elbows on his knees and chin on his hands.

"I bays no pills," replied the smith, as the account was handed him.

"Why, what's the matter, Mr. Coon?"

"Vel, der matter ish dot I haf failed in peesness und I doan pay nobody."

"Failed? Have you actually failed?"

"I haf."

"Well, you'll have to pay me in full, just the same. Under the laws of this State no man can fail unless he locks his doors, and as I passed the shop yours were wide open."

"Dunder und blitzen! dot vhas der carelessness of my poy Show! How much is dot pill? I pays him queek und runs down und nails oop der doors myself! Dunder! But dot poy nefer makes a Yankee, if he lifs here a tousand years!"

CHURCH PILLARS.

How They Crumbled and Fell in a Long Island Village.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

"Oh, everything is progressing very favorably out our way, except the churches," said the Jamaica farmer in response to the cashier's question.

"What is the matter with the churches?" inquired the cashier.

"They don't seem to get on pretty well," answered the old man. "They are all hard up and there don't seem to be any money coming in. I'm afraid the good old times for churches never will come back again," and the farmer sighed dismally.

"I'm sorry for that," said the cashier sympathetically. "Are the times hard? Don't the people seem to have any money?"

"We haven't the same class of people we used to have. What there is of 'em are good enough, but the people we depended on the most are with us no more."

"Who were they?" interrogated the cashier.

"Well, there was Jim Bolster. Jim was a free and open giver. Always ready and never backward. But Jim got behind in his accounts somehow, and they fetched him back from Canada. The congregation tried all it knew to save Jim, but the bank wouldn't let up and so we lost poor Jim for ten years."

"That's bad," sighed the cashier.

"Then we relied on Tom Bullock for a long time, and Tom stood well to the fore. He sort o' took poor Jim's place. Some people, seeing the church was getting on, appeared to think that perhaps Jim had only got his deserts after all. Tom rose rapidly in the estimation of the congregation and we had milk and honey right straight along. But one day it came out that Tom had made a miscalculation in his balances and they locked him up until the error could be rectified."

"How did he come out?" asked the cashier.

"He hasn't come out yet?" replied the farmer, blowing his nose vigorously. "A good many of our people have got through expecting him out. Well, that gave us another set back. We knew that if they'd given either Jim or Tom a chance they would have repented, and it would have been a good thing all around. But they didn't, and it was a great back set to us."

"Did it break you up?" inquired the cashier, kindly.

"Not exactly, though it winged us pretty badly. Bill Freemen was doing a pretty good business as an insurance president, and he said that the church should not go down for want of funds as long as his company held together. The parson seen him and had a talk with him. Told him frankly that this sort of thing was kinder hurting the cause among the scoffers, and hoped he would try to keep a little straight. Then he proposed that Bill make over to the church all he intended to give in one big lump, so that if the Philistines ever got the bulge on him, why, the church wouldn't suffer only what the people might think of it having so many shining lights under a bushel. But Bill said he was all right. Nothing could happen to him, and he would see that the church was put on its feet the first thing. Several of us saw him and urged him to heel us up with oil, for no man knoweth when the Sheriff cometh. But Bill hung out and the result was that he hadn't more than fairly got started than they gobbled him for some deficiency about an orphan's estate that he was managing, and away went Bill to join them as had went before."

"Well, that's what I call hard luck," murmured the cashier.

"It was pretty tough on us what was trying to do the Maker's will," assented the old man.

"How did you manage to pull through?"

"Ed. Beebe came right forward and said this thing had been going on about long enough, and now he proposed to take a hand in. Everybody knew Bebee from childhood, and we looked upon him as the ark of safety. He'd got into a mining company somehow, and he proposed to pay off the church mortgage with mining stock. We had a big jubilee the night the stock was transferred to the trustees, and the women wept and the men hollered. We all agreed that it would have been better for the cause if Jim and Tom and Bill had been more like Ed. If they had they'd never gone to State's Prison and left us in the hole they did."

"So you found good luck at last?"

"We thought we had, but before the trustees could turn the stock we found that the mine wasn't worth a cent and the stockholders were responsible for the debts of the concern."

"Whew!" ejaculated the cashier; "that was bad!"

"We thought it was going to beat us, but just then we got a windfall. When we come to look up the trustees, we found they had eloped with the certificates!"

"And that let you out."

"Let us out on that. But it disheartened us a great deal. And then there began to be rows in the church. Some of 'em got down on the pa'son, and they cooked up a breach of promise suit agin him and a packed jury said he was guilty. The mortgagees foreclosed on the church and the whole business went up."

"So you have no services now?"

"Oh, a few of us gets together, once in a while, and makes up a basket for them that are with us no longer, but as a church we don't amount to much."

"What is your position in the church?" asked the cashier.

"I was the next man, after Ed. Beebe, to put up for the running expenses, but the thing busted just in time to save me. Oh, yes, everything is moving along all right out in Jamaicay, craps is good, business is brisk, but we miss them as had the church most at heart. We miss 'em sadly," and the old man buckled up his wallet and mounted his wagon with a heavy heart.

THE FOUNDLING.

How the Heiress to an English Estate Was Discovered.

From the New York Herald.

The heiress long missing in Dublin has been found, and curious accounts are given of her adventures. It seems that in 1857 a Baronet, who lived in the midland counties of England, had two sons, the elder of whom became enamored of his father's cook, and at length secretly married her on the 15th of November, 1859. The pair proceeded to Dublin, where, early in the following January, she gave birth to a daughter. Being apparently desirous that the fact should not become known she determined to desert the infant, and accordingly on the 24th of that month she went to Kingstown, made inquiries and ascertained the name of a person who had the reputation of being a good-hearted and well-to-do woman. The mother returned to Dublin and went again to Kingstown in the evening, carrying her baby with her, and at half-past 6 o'clock she left the child on the doorstep of the house of the person whose address she had previously ascertained. The infant was well wrapped up in two complete outfits of clothing, and concealed in one of its wrappers was a purse containing fifty sovereigns and a Testament. The mother rang the house bell violently and ran some little distance, whence she could still see the house door. She saw the child taken up and carried into the house. On the following day she and her husband crossed over to England.

From that time and during the succeeding twelve years their doings have not transpired, but in 1872 they went to Rome and continued to live there. In the early part of 1877 the Baronet died and left his entire possessions to his heir, the estate being worth between £13,000 and £14,000 a year. The inheritor of this wealth was, however, of delicate health, and both he and his wife died suddenly at their residence in Rome on the 17th of October, 1877. As it was not then known whether the deceased had any issue the disposal of his property was deferred by the executors. His brother, who was a Colonel in a cavalry regiment, having learned from the servants of the deceased that there was a child of the marriage whose whereabouts was unknown, determined to endeavor to trace her. He could not, however, obtain any clew to the missing girl until about four months ago, when he found among his brother's books and papers at Rome a diary belonging to the wife, in which were entered a number of facts connected with the birth and subsequent desertion of the child, and her own actions subsequently. Among other items it contained an entry dated January 24, 1860, after she had left the child at Kingstown, describing the place where she had left it, and her own proceedings on that day, besides giving some other important information.

Possessed of this clew, the Colonel, in December last, placed the matter in the hands of a detective, whom he instructed to spare no trouble in the search for the missing girl. Ultimately the story of the girl's career from the time of her desertion has been obtained. It appears that after remaining for two years and seven months in the house of the person on whose doorstep she had been left, the girl was sent to Rathdown Union Workhouse, where she remained for nearly four years. She was then sent into the country and placed in the care of a foster mother, whence, after being trained in the ordinary duties of a domestic servant, and after receiving a fair education, she was sent out to service, and until a few days ago she was employed as a servant at a gentleman's house in the neighborhood of Dublin. Immediately upon the proofs of his niece's identity being forthcoming the Colonel hurried to Dublin and brought all the certificates he had in reference to the case with him, and he at once took steps to have her removed to a position more befitting her new station in life. To mark her gratitute to the Colonel she offered him half her fortune, but that gentleman declined the offer.

THE DEATH OF CLEBURNE.

The Current Accounts Corrected by Two Confederate Soldiers.

From the Vicksburg Herald.

I saw in your paper of yesterday morning the article headed "The Death of Cleburne," copied from the Philadelphia Times. I have noticed that all published accounts of Gen' Cleburne's death have been of about the same version as the one in the Philadelphia Times. They are, however, all wrong. All published accounts state that Gen. Cleburne and his horse were killed on top of the Federal breastworks, at Franklin, Tenn., and that his horse had his forefeet on the breastworks, dead in that position. Some accounts have the horse on top of the breastworks, with its forefeet inside of the works and the hind feet on the outside.

It was the horse of Gen. John Adams, of Loring's Division, that lay on top of the breastworks. The body of Adams lay on the outside at the bottom of the works, where it had rolled or fallen when he was shot while riding over the works, leading his brigade. Gen. Cleburne led his division on foot. His horse was in the rear, and was not killed, as reported.

The terrible report that Cleburne was missing ran through our ranks that whole dreadful night, and our fears and anxieties were almost disheartening. We almost prayed that he might have been wounded only, or captured; but that was not to be. I and two others were the first to discover his dead body at early dawn the next morning. He was about 40 or 50 yards from the works. He lay flat upon his back as if asleep, his military cap partly over his eyes. He had on a new gray uniform, the coat of the sack or blouse pattern. It was unbuttoned and open; the lower part of his vest was unbuttoned and open; the lower part of his vest was unbuttoned. He wore a white linen shirt, which was stained with blood on the front part of the left side, or just left of the abdomen. This was the only sign of a wound I saw on him, and I believe it was the only one he had received.

I have always been inclined to think that, feeling his end was near, he had thus lain himself down to die, or that his body had been carried there during the night. He was in his sock feet, his boots having been stolen. His watch, sword belt and other valuables were all gone, his body having been robbed during the night. "Being pierced with 40 bullets through and through" is a mere invention, as is also his lying dead on top of the breastworks. Upon discovering Cleborne's body, I went to some parties who had an ambulance up at the breastworks and were picking up the wounded and the more distinguished of the dead officers. I found the ambulance to be in charge of the Rev. Thomas Markham, the well known Presbyterian minister of New Orleans, and formerly of this place. He was then chaplain of Featherston's Mississippi Brigade, Loring's Division. I pointed Cleburne's body out to him and asked him to come with the ambulance and get it. The men that were at that moment lifting up the body of Gen. John Adams, and it being rather heavy for them, I assisted to put his body in the same ambulance. The Rev. Thomas Markham, whom everybody here knows, will corroborate every word of what I have stated.

Yours truly, JOHN MCQUAID

In order to ascertain the correctness of the above statement, Dr. Markham was seen. He said that as far as he knew it was entirely correct. The bodies of the two Generals were found in the position described by Mr. McQuaid, and were taken charge of by him (Dr. Markham). He had read the romantic accounts of the position in which Gen. Cleburne's body was found, but they were incorrect.

Bathing.

From the New York Sun.

Dr. Sargent, Medical Director of the Christian Union Gymnasium, Boston, astonished a lecture audience by the assertion that there can be abuse in bathing. Our cities, he said, are full of thoughtless persons who pride themselves upon being superior creatures because they indulge in the luxury of a full bath daily, with a frequent Turkish or Russian ablution as an extra—a kind of bath which the doctor thinks should only be taken under advice for disease. He explains that free perspiration and the wearing of heavy flannels promote the functions of the skin so that only an amount of bathing essential to cleanliness is needed to maintain health. Warm baths are the substitutes which luxury has devised to do the work of exercise and make up for the deficiencies of artificial life. Twice a week is often enough to take them, according to the lecturer, as their too frequent use is debilitating. The tonic effect of a cool sponge bath in the morning would not willingly be given up by those who know the delightful afterglow and the protection which the habit affords against colds; but here again a discriminating science, backing up common sense, steps in and says: "No cold baths, unless they are agreeable and you are, in point of health and vigor, fully up to it." The intelligent person who learns to "know his frame" and to observe the effects of diet, bath and exercise can usually order his life better than anybody can direct it for him.

A Whale in the Chesapeake.

From the Baltimore Sun.

A large sperm is ashore on Smith's Point, south side, the entrance into the Potomac River. The captain and crew of the schooner William H. Knight, which arrived yesterday from San Domingo, report seeing the whale on Friday at 3 p. m. He was about a mile inside the buoy in shallow water, and was using his huge tail with vigor, slapping the water with a crack like the report of a cannon. His efforts to get into deep water were terrific. First the head would rise out of the water, spouting and foaming. Then the tail would rise and fall, churning the water. The whale had evidently been driven in from sea by the storm and easterly winds, and in making for deep water again had grounded on Smith's Point. A number of oyster pungies were sailing in close quarters to the whale, but kept out of harm's way, as a blow from the tail would have smashed things.

A TEXAS RANGER

Tied by Comanches on a Wild Buffalo's Back.

Texas Correspondence Philadelphia Times.

The chief of the hunting outfit was a man in middle life, six feet three or four inches tall, straight as an arrow and lithe and wiry as a panther. He had keen gray eyes, which were the most expressive feature of a rugged though kindly face. He was dressed in true frontier style and superbly armed. I admired a peculiar knife and pistol-scabbard which he wore and he informed me that it was made out of the skirts of the saddle of that famous desperado, Sam Bass. He was at first very diffident and spoke about himself with great modesty. After we became better acquainted he grew more communicative, and around the camp-fire during that two weeks he spun many a yarn of frontier adventure, rivaling in dramatic interest the stories told by the dime-novel writers. This frontiersman's proper name is N. L. Jenkins, but, like most border men, he has an alias, of which I shall have something to say further on. He was born in Tennessee, but when he was thirteen years old his parents moved West, settling first in Missouri, afterwards wandering to Kansas and from there to Colorado. Young Jenkins early learned the use of the rifle; he became an expert marksman and at the age of 16 killed his first Indian. He is a magnificent horseman and is rather proud of this accomplishment. Continued out-door life on the plains and in the mountains developed his independence of spirit and for years he lived among the wilds of the then almost unknown West hunting and fishing. He had many adventures and countless hair-breadth escapes from death. Like most border men he cultivated an intense and bitter hatred for Lo, and many an Indian has been sent to the happy hunting grounds through his agency. I asked him how many Indians he had killed in his lifetime.

"Right smart" was the answer; "so many that I lost count of them years ago."

A MODEL FRONTIERSMAN.

His fame as a brave and skillful border man gave him a reputation all along the frontier, and just after the close of the late war he was employed by Brigadier General McKenzie, the famous Indian fighter, as a scout and guide. The General became strongly attached to him, and the friendship continues to this day. He participated in many fights with the red men, and when McKenzie raided in Mexico Jenkins guided the troops as far as the Rio Grande. For his services on this occasion General McKenzie presented him with a fine horse, which he still rides. The noted desperado, Sam Bass, was at this time terrorizing Texas by a succession of bold and brilliant robberies. Jenkins determined to follow Bass and mounted on a mule he took up the trail. The Rangers were pressing Bass at this time, and a party under command of Capt. Peake, of the frontier battallion, overtook Jenkins. When the commander of the Rangers asked the scout where he was going he made a characteristic reply. "I'm following up Sam Bass," he said, "and in twenty-four hours, judging by the sign, I'll overhaul his outfit."

This reply so pleased Captain Peake that he enlisted Jenkins on the spot, and he remained with the Rangers several years. He was with Peake's command when Sam Bass was attacked on Salt creek, Denton county, early in the spring of 1878. In the fight which followed Jenkins killed Bass' lieutenant, the notorious "Arkansas Johnson," and wears the latter's spurs as a memento of the struggle. He was a favorite scout of the lamented Custer, and was with him only a short time before that last bloody battle on the Little Big Horn.

A LOOK AT CIVILIZATION.

Capt. Jim Peake considered Jenkins one of his best scouts and speaks of him in terms of the warmest praise. When Jenkins joined Peake's command he had been away from civilization for years, and the captain on one accasion having to pay a visit to the capital city of the Lone Star State took Jenkins along with him. When they reached Austin, Jenkins, who was in the dress of a frontiersman and armed to the teeth, attracted a great deal of attention, and the boys followed him about in crowds. He thought this ovation complimentary to himself and invited the curious juveniles to the nearest confectionery, where he spent all his money treating them to candy, soda water and ice cream. When night came the Captain took Jenkins to the Raymond House for supper. The dining room was crowded and the table was resplendent in its setting of glass and silver. Jenkins advanced to the table, drew his bowie-knife, speared a biscuit and a piece of steak, and stepping back began to eat in camp, standing up, with his bowie-knife and fingers answering all purposes. A grinning servant invited him to be seated.

"No, thankee," was the answer, "I'm doing tolerable well here."

He was assigned a room at the hotel furnished in the most luxurious manner, with soft carpets, rich furniture and a downy bed. When the captain went in to arouse him next morning Jenkins was stretched out on the floor, wrapped in his blanket.

"Why didn't you sleep in the bed?" asked the captain.

"I did try the durned thing," was the answer, "but I bogged in it clear over my head."

HOW HE GOT HIS TITLE.

"My friend "Mad Milton" had addressed Jenkins as "Buffalo Bill," and one night I asked him how he came by the title:

"Well," said he, "It's a long story. It was 'way back in the fifties and me and my paidner were scouting and buffalo hunting on the headquarters of the Colorado. Indians were tolerable thick in them parts, but we were in camp three or four days before they pestered us. One evening I started out to kill a deer. I walked up the bank of a little creek for a mile or two, and finally started up a buck. I fired and he dropped dead. Walking up to where he lay I whipped out my knife to bleed him. Just as I stooped I saw the feathered head of a Comanche not twenty feet away, and before I could raise my gun three more bobbed up. I dropped one of 'em and stepped behind a rock for shelter just as about twenty of them rushed upon me from the rear. I clubbed my gun, but before I could swing it around my head to strike I was knocked down, and knew nothing more until I come to in their camp, which was on a bluff about three miles from where I killed the deer. My head pained me a good deal, but I had the consolation of believing it would soon be over, for I'd killed many Comanches, and I didn't expect any mercy.

BOUND TO A BUFFALO'S BACK.

"They gave me some breakfast—a slice of the very deer I had killed—and then brought me out in the center of the encampment. I learned then, for the first time, what my punishment was to be. Tied to a stake in front of the chief's lodge was a young buffalo bull about two-thirds grown and as wild as a broncho pony. Two bucks roped the bull and tied him down. Then they bound me on his back. At a signal from the chief they cut the bull loose, and, urged on by the yells of the whole tribe, he started off at a pace that made me catch my breath. He headed down the creek up which I was coming when surprised by the Comanches. I expected every minute would be my last. I shut my eyes, but opened them again with a start when I heard the crack of a rifle and my shaggy horse fell forward on his head, dead. The fall bruised me considerably, and I lay in such a position that I could not see around me. I had no idea what was coming next, but was mighty glad when a familiar voice called my name and my pardner cut the thongs that bound me. There was a squad of soldiers with him, and they were searching for me when the bull rushed by them. The soldiers called me 'The Buffalo Bull,' and I was known by that name for years. It was finally corrupted into 'Buffalo Bill,' and men who don't know my real name recognize me by the nickname."

"I suppose you have heard," I said, "that another man claims that nom de guerrre and has a national notoriety in consequence?"

"Yes, yes," he answered, "I have heard of him."

"Which has the prior right to the name?"

"Well," said Jenkins, after a moment's hesitation, "I understand that the other fellow was a buffalo hunter, and was given the name when they were building the Union Pacific Railroad. I had the ride on the bull in '57, and the people on the frontier called me 'Buffalo Bill' long before I began to scout for McKenzie."

Jenkins left the rangers on the 1st of last September, and has been antelope hunting ever since.

CROWNING THE CZAR.

Lavish Preparations for the Coronation of the Russian Autocrat.

Cor. of the New York Herald.

It is reported that the chief sovereigns and princes who were at Berlin during the celebration of the silver wedding of the Crown Prince and Crown Princess have agreed to be represented at the coronation of the Czar by ambassadors only. The last act of Prince Gortschakoff was to dictate a telegram to the Czar saluting him on the occasion of his birthday.

Invitations to attend the coronation of the Czar at Moscow have been sent to the families of all the crowned heads of Europe and to most of the small potentates of Central Asia, as well as to the Emperors of China and of Japan.

There are great preparations going on at the present time in St. Petersburg and Moscow for the coronation, which is to take place in May. Already many hundreds of horses are being transferred from the imperial stables of St. Petersburg to Moscow. The number of these animals required for the occasion may be surmised from the fact that the Minister of the Imperial Household has issued an order to engage 1,200 volunteers as stablemen in addition to the regular men in the employment. Thirty-six gilded closed carriages and four gilded open carriages are to be sent to Moscow for the occasion. These vehicles must, of course, be more imposing than comfortable, since they mostly belong to the style of carriage made a century and even more ago. Most of them were constructed in the beginning of the eighteenth century, while others were made in the reigns of Alexanner I. and Nicholas I. Conspicuous among them is the magnificent gilded carriage presented to the Empress Elizabeth, of Russia, by Frederick the Great in 1746. These forty carriages, with the invited guests, will be drawn by 188 horses, fifty-nine of which have been recently imported from Hanover expressly for the purpose, and are reported to be a splendid set of horses—all alike as peas and all of a magnificent bay shade.

Two ermine-lined purple coronation mantles have been ordered of the dealer in furs, Grunwald, of Moscow. These mantles are to be about seven yards in length, with an imperial eagle embroidered in gold on the back of each of them. The dress which is to be worn by the Empress on the coronation is being embroidered in the famous atelier of Loman, in Moscow. It will consist of finely woven silver cloth, all embroidered in silver, a garland of embroidery nearly a yard wide running around the bottom of the skirt and covering the train. The train alone, consisting almost entirely of silver, is to weigh more than twenty pounds.

The old capital of Russia is to display the greatest hospitality on that occasion. All the numerous monasteries, all private houses, are undergoing repairs in order to offer accommodations to the expected guests. None of the persons summoned for the occasion to Moscow by the imperial decree are to be quartered in hotels; the houses of the nobility, of the notables and of the dignitaries of the Church are open to those. The Metropolitans of St. Petersburg and of Kiew, who are to crown the Czar, are to have a splendid set of rooms in the two large historic monasteries of Moscow, and likewise will be accommodated the other twelve prelates who officiate at the coronation. The nobles of the government of Moscow, in council assembled, have decided to offer the traditionary bread and salt to the monarch on a plate which is to cost 5,000 rubles. They have resolved to give a ball to the Emperor, at which, in order to avoid a crowd, but 2,700 persons will be present, though the hall of the House of the Nobility in Moscow may easily contain over 4,000 guests. Fifteen thousand rubles have been voted for the decoration of the ball-room, as much more for the restoration of furniture, and, all expenses considered, the ball to be given by the nobility is very likely to cost 100,000 rubles, which sum will be levied as a self-imposed tax from the income of the landed proprietors of the Government of Moscow, who are all eager to extend their hospitality to the Czar and Czaritza.

Italian Genius in America.

From the New York Morning Journal.

We are promised before long a continuous line of railroad between New York and the Mexican capital, by which we shall be enabled to travel in five days, on through trains, from the hall of our own city fathers to the halls of the Montezumas. Count Telfener, an Italian nobleman of immense wealth, whose engineering skill has already been directed to such grand works, has grasped this great enterprise, and will carry it through to completion. The Italians have given us several proofs of their spirit and energy, but none more remarkable than this. Count Telfener, a millionaire, the owner of half a dozen palaces in Europe, with a wife who is the reigning queen of fashion and beauty in the salons of Paris and other European cities, and with every inducement to a life of luxury and ease, pulls on his riding boots, dons his sombrero, draws the buckle of his pistol belt and starts out in Texas and Mexico building railroads, in the construction of which he has himself invested millions of his own money. Without speaking a word of English he comes to the States, makes contracts, hires labor, raises capital, and conducts the difficult task of building great lines of railroad through two countries, with a skill that commands success. He will no doubt make additional millions by the undertaking, and his cleverness, pluck and perseverance deserve a rich reward.

DOCTOR WHITTIER

617 St. Charles Street, St. Louis, Mo.,

A regular graduate of two medical colleges, has been longer engaged in the treatment of Chronic, Nervous, Skin and Blood Diseases than any other physician in St. Louis, as city papers show and all old residents know. Consultation at office or by mail, free and invited. A friendly talk or opinion costs nothing. When it is inconvenient to visit the city for treatment, medicine can be sent by mail or express everywhere. Curable cases guaranteed; where doubt exists it is frankly stated.

Nervous Prostration, Debility, Mental and Physical Weakness, Mercurial and other affections of Throat, Skin and Bones, Blood Impurities and Blood Poisoning, Skin Affections, Old Sores and Ulcers, Impediments to Marriage, Rheumatism, Piles. Especial attention to cases from over-worked brain. SURGICAL Cases receive Special Attention.

Diseases arising from Indiscretion, Excess Exposure or Indulgence, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Debility, Dimness of Sight or Perverted Vision, Defective Memory, Pimples on the Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Want of Pleasure in Life, Want of Ambition, Unfitness to Marry, Melancholy, Dyspepsia, Headache, Restlessness, Loss of Spirits, Pains in the Back, etc., are treated with unparalleled success Treatment without hindrance to business, safe, sure and permanent. Sent everywhere by mail or express.

Catarrh, Throat, Nose and Lung Disease. Liver Complaints.

It is self-evident that a physician paying particular attention to a class of cases attains great skill, and physicians in regular practice all over the country, knowing this, frequently recommend cases to this oldest office in America, where every known appliance is resorted to, and the proved good remedies of all ages and countries are used. A whole house is used for office purposes, and all are treated with skill in a respectful manner; and knowing what to do, no experiments are made. On account of the great number of cases applying, the charges are kept low, often lower than is demanded by others. If you secure the skill and get a speedy and perfect cure, that is the important matter.

CURE YOURSELF.

Bohannan's "Vegetable Curative" cures all Nervous Diseases, Mental and Physical Weakness, General Debility, Kidney Complaints, Organic Weakness, or any of the train of evils arising from Indiscretion, Over Brain Work, OR ANY OTHER CAUSE, which often terminate in Consumption or Insanity. Many men, from the effects of Youthful Imprudence, have brought about a state of weakness that has reduced the general system so much as to induce symptoms of nearly every other disease, and the real cause of the trouble scarcely ever being suspected they are doctored for everything but the right one. Notwithstanding the many valuable remedies that medical science has produced for the relief of this class of patients, none of the ordinary modes of treatment effect a cure as promptly as BOHANNAN'S VEGETABLE CURATIVE.

It has been used by old Dr. Bohannan in his private practice for over thirty years, has never failed in curing even the Worst Cases. The patient gains strength and elasticity of spirits at once, as it acts directly on the parts affected as a soothing and healing tonic and anodyne, imparting power and tone and restoring them to their natural state, the same as if never affected. The ingredients are simple productions of nature—barks, roots, herbs, etc., and are a specific for the above diseases. Permanently curing most cases in from two to seven weeks time.

Price Five Dollars sent to any address. For sale only at Bohannan's Drug Store, No. 621 North Fifth Street, corner of Christy avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

A Treatise fully describing the above sent FREE.

PILES CURED. "Bohannan's Pile Ointment," cures the worst cases of Piles, no matter what form or how long standing, in from 2 to 5 days. Price, One Dollar per box. Prepared by BOHANNAN & CO., Druggists, S. W. Cor. Fifth and Christy ave.

DR. WOOD—Thirty years' practical experience—cures all CHRONIC DISEASES of male or female, no matter how SERIOUS or long standing, in less time and for LESS MONEY than any other physician. SHERIFF'S SALE UNDER DEED OF TRUST.—Whereas Louis Wiget and Joseph Wiget, by their deed dated the twenty-second of June, A. D. 1875, and recorded in the Recorder's office of St. Louis county (now city), in book 520, page 526, conveyed to Adolph Kehr in trust the following described tract, piece or parcel of land, lying and fronting on Gravois road, in the city and county (now city) of St. Louis and State of Missouri, as follows, to-wit:

The north half off of the southwest quarter of block fifty-six (56) of the St. Louis commons, containing four and ninety hundredths of an acre, and is bounded on the east by Bernard Crickard, south by John and Gertrude Heim, north by Michael Hollocher and west by Michael Hollocher and Gravois road, and the same property acquired by parties of the first part by deed of even date herewith from Gertrude Heim.

Which said conveyance was made in trust to secure the payment of six certain promissory notes in said deed described. And whereas said notes remain due and unpaid, and the said Adolph Kehr, said trustee, has departed this life without having completed the performance of the duties imposed on him by said deed of trust, and the Sheriff of St. Louis county having declined to act in the place of said original trustee and the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis having made an order on the 7th day of March, 1883, appointing the Sheriff of the city of St. Louis trustee to execute said deed of trust in lieu and place of the original trustee. Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that, at the request of the legal holder of said notes, and by virtue of the said order of court, and in pursuance of the provisions of said deed of trust, the undersigned will, on between the hours of 9 o'clock in the forenoon and 5 o'clock in the afternoon of that day at the east front door of the Court-house in the city of St. Louis, State of Missouri, proceed to sell, at public vendue, to the highest bidder, for cash, the above described real estate to satisfy said notes and the costs of executing said trust.

IN the Circuit Court City of St. Louis.—Sophia Borbein, plaintiff, vs. Sophia Borbein Jr., et al., defendants.—Whereas William Borbein and Sophia, his wife by their certain deed of trust dated the 12th day of November, 1869, and duly recorded in the Recorder's office of the county, now city, of St. Louis, in book 392, page 262, conveyed to the undersigned, Clemens A. Schnake, the following described real estate, to-wit: A lot of ground situated in Shreve's addition to the city of St. Louis, in block No. 266 of said city, fronting twenty-seven feet and six inches on the eastern side of Thirteenth street, bounded on the north by lot conveyed to Meyers, on the east by an alley parallel to said Thirteenth street and distant therefrom ninety-seven feet and four inches, on the south by property formerly of Boswell, and on the west by Thirteenth street, with the buildings and other improvements thereon; which conveyance was in trust to secure to Peter Sippel the payment of certain notes in said deed fully described. And whereas the Circuit Court City of St. Louis, by its decree in the above entitled cause on the 20th day of February, 1883, did order and adjudge that the plaintiff, Sophia Borbein, be subrogated to all the rights of said Sippel in and to said notes and deed of trust as they existed prior to the 3d day of May, 1876, and did charge the amount of said notes and interest in the aggregate sum of $1,599 56 upon the real estate above described, and did order and direct the undersigned, in default of the payment of said sum, to sell said real estate according to the terms of said deed of trust; and whereas said sum of $1,599 56, though due, remains unpaid; now, therefore, public notice is hereby given that the undersigned will, on between the hours of nine o'clock in the forenoon and five o'clock in the afternoon of that day, at the eastern front door of the Court-house in the city of St. Louis, Mo., sell at public vendue, to the highest bidder, for cash, the real estate above described; such sale being subject to the approval of the court.

HENRY M

CHINAMEN.

Why the Corporations Prefer Mongolian Laborers.

Six Thousand Controlled by One Man on the Plains.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Times, on the line of the Southern Pacific Railroad, describes how the pig-tailed navvies are disciplined. The construction company contracted for these laborers in California at a fixed price per head and was under bond to return them to the agent of the Six Companies when the road was completed. Ah Sin kept his ears open and was observant. It was not long before he learned that 100 cents for twelve hours of hard work was not the usual price paid railroad laborers. A rumor reached him that another great road was coming on to meet the one he was building, and that navvies received $3 a day thereon. He was justly indignant at the advantage which the enterprising but soulless corporation had taken of his ignorance of prices. He did not openly protest, nor did he hold a monster indignation meeting, with brass band accompaniment and strike for higher wages. These are a part of our peculiar civilization and Ah Sin had come straight from the rice fields and tea groves of the Celestial Kingdom, where such assertions of independence and liberty usually cost the promoters, aiders and abettors their lives. He revolted, however, in secret and determined to better his condition. He began to desert, and the country between El Paso and the Pesos river was full of eastward moving pigtails. The company sent after the recreants and recaptured most of them. This did not deter others from venturing, and the company saw plainly that something must be done, but exactly what their wisest heads could not decide.

PUTTING DOWN THE INSURRECTION.

In this emergency a man arose—they always do under such circumstances—who boldly proclaimed his ability to nip the Chinese rebellion in the bud. The company granted him extraordinary powers and he entered upon his labors. In three months after his peculiar methods of subjection were inaugurated nothing could tempt one of his Celestial navvies to desert his post. I met this railroad Napoleon one day and our acquaintance ripened into a comparative intimacy before I learned that in his presence the bravest rice-eater among these almond-eyed navvies quailed and trembled. He is one of the types of border semi-civilization, six feet four inches in height, with a frame like a Hercules and a face on which the lines of firmness, decision and command are sharply cut. He has very white and even teeth and shows then often, for he smiles frequently. An admirer of his remarked to me: "When Martin's nose comes down to meet his lip, and his lip goes up to meet his nose, and those teeth of his glisten and shine, why look out. He means business." I was waiting for the accommodation train to leave the "end of the track" when I formed his acquaintance. He is a man of intelligence and thoroughly informed on the subject of Chinese character peculiarities. He speaks the language fluently and can decipher the hieroglyphics on a "washee-washee" bill at sight.

A TEXAS PEACEMAKER.

While we were talking the foreman of the track-laying gang came into the car.

"Ah, Martin," he said, "I have been looking for you. One of these fellows who deserted last month has returned, and the interpreter says that he has induced half the men to quit and go across the country to the Sunset extension. He is down among my gang now."

"He is, is he?" quoth Martin; and that peculiar falling down of nose and flying up of lip disclosed his white teeth. "I'll fix him."

He picked up a heavy billet of wood as he finished speaking, and invited me to go along and "see the fun." I went.

The obnoxious Chinaman was in the center of an excited group of his compatriots, volubly discoursing upon the superior inducements held out to laborers on the other road. We were close upon him when one of the group caught sight of Martin's white teeth and uttered a warning cry. The crowd scattered and the chief conspirator started to flee. Too late. The billet of wood flew through the air, struck the deserter between the shoulders and he fell flat in the dust. Martin bent over him still smiling, and by way of resuscitation kicked the prostrate Celestial several times. The Confucian groaned and raised himself to a sitting posture. He was ordered to stand up, and did so with some difficulty. The foreman produced a stout rope, and the smiling Martin requested two of the track-layers to bind his prisoner's foot. He assisted them by administering to each sundry kicks and cuffs, which tended to quicken movements, considerably. When the conspirater was securely fastened he was ordered to march forward to the car. We followed.

"I don't reckon there'll be any deserters from this gang," observed Martin, and he administered a lusty kick to a water-carrier who had stopped to look after the prisoner.

"These Chinamen are terrible cowards. Do you know that every one of those fellows carries a pistol concealed under his blouse? It is a fact. That cuss ahead has one. I saw it when he was lying on the ground. There are upwards of six thousand of 'em here and yet I manage them without difficulty. If it was among any other race of people my life wouldn't be worth two bits."

The prisoner had reached the car and stood beside the step crying and sobbing. His captor kicked him several times, and he managed to scramble to the platform, although had no use of his hands or arms. We followed him into the car and Martin reached his hand under the prisoner's blouse and drew therefrom a large Colt revolver.

"Now if he had been a white man he would have shot me on sight."

BULLDOZING A CHINAMAN.

He cocked the pistol and, as though by accident, pointed the muzzle at the Chinaman's head. The wretch fell on his knees and began to beg piteously. Martin seemed to enjoy the poor devil's misery and smiled upon him benignantly.

"It is hop die with you anyway, John," was Martin's consoling observation. "If I shoot you here it is all over. If I carry you back up the track you'll be hung."

The Chinaman continued to pray for mercy, and after drawing bead on his head several times, Martin put the pistol in his pocket and we walked out on the platform.

"That seems like cruel treatment," he said, "but it is the only way to manage 'em. Make 'em fear you. Why, when I first began on 'em they were deserting at the rate of fifty a day. If the company had not backed me up there would not have been a Chinaman left on the line. You see, sir, out here there is really no law. The company contracted to carry these fellows back to 'Frisco as soon as the road was finished, and every one who deserts is so much loss to them, for they are under heavy bond to return them in good order. There is no telling how much damage this one might have done if I had not stopped him."

"What will you do with him?" I asked.

"Oh, I'll carry him back up the road a couple of hundred miles and drop him. He won't come back."

There was something significant in this latter sentence, but as the speaker's teeth were gleaming, I did not demand more explicit information.

When we got ready to move out the Chinaman was locked in an empty box-car. That was the last I saw of him. One of the train hands told me the next morning that he was dropped alongside the track during the night. When I asked what they were shooting at about midnight he replied:

"Antelope!"

Every mile or two we passed a Chinaman's grave. They bury their dead above ground in wooden boxes, over which a thin layer of dirt is thrown. Each one was marked by a headboard, covered with hieroglyphics. Some of the graves were newly made and the little piles of paper money, which the dead man's friends had placed there to pay his expenses in the other world, had not yet blown away. On some of the graves were bowls of rice and baked chicken. Dead Chinamen are always supplied with provisions for the long journey. I remarked on the number of graves to the brakeman.

"Yes," he said; "it is a sickly country—for Chinamen!"

That fellow's irony was incomparable.

All the sections are worked by Chinese laborers. At one of the section houses where we stopped the "boss" came out and chatted with Martin.

"Oh, by the way," he said at length, "that fellow who was ki—who died yesterday is laying out there in the car-house. This new gang of mine are from Canton, and it's agin' their religion to bury a Hong Kong man."

"Religion be d——d!" answered Martin, and his teeth gleamed. "Call 'em up."

The section boss did as directed and the car was soon surrounded by pigtails. Martin addressed them from the platform. One Celestial, who seemed to be the spokesman replied. Martin promptly knocked him down. He dealt out persuasive kicks and cuffs to several others. Before we left the dead Chinaman from Kong Kong was securely boxed, and, as we passed around a curve, I saw his Canton friends begin to throw dirt over the rude coffin.

A DOOMED MAN.

My friend, the brakeman, after we became better acquainted, volunteered some interesting information about the "Cap'n." As it was mainly of a statistical nature I am unable to give his remarks verbatim. He seemed to hold the subduer of the Chinese in high esteem and gave me minute data respecting the number of Celestials he had "croaked."

"They'll git him one o' these days, though," he sagely concluded. "They've ditched his train twice an' it wouldn't surprise me any day ef he was killed. These Chinee are mighty treacherous."

A gentleman connected with the road informs me since that Martin is invaluable. Without his assistance the company would be unable to control the Chinamen. He is Judge, jury and executioner, and whenever his white teeth gleam the Celestials shiver, for they know from experience that this sinister smile means business!

PAINTED DRESSES.

Descriptions of Some Ladies' Gowns With Novel Artistic Decorations.

From the New York Sun.

Although ladies have appeared at many public balls and parties this season with painted dresses of novel and exquisite pattern, the fashion does not appear to be spreading as rapidly as was expected several years ago, when it first became prominent in this country. It was asserted at first that by the aid of painting all the effect of the most delicate embroidery could be secured, with much brighter and durable colors, and at less expense. The groundwork of silk, satin or velvet has furnished opportunity for many beautiful designs, and some effects have been produced that could not have been attained in embroidrry without enormous cost. Some of the ladies complain, however, that the painting is not so durable as embroidery, and requires greater care to prevent destruction by cracking. The parts of the dress usually ornamented by painting have generally been the large, smooth surfaces, which are not easily wrinkled; but it is admitted that the wearer of a painted dress, if she wishes to preserve its beauty, must be a very careful person indeed.

Among the earliest painted dresses to attract attention in this city were several which were worn by Miss Fanny Davenport. Since then many actresses have worn painted dresses, generally the work of artist friends. Mary Anderson has had a number of painted costumes. One of black velvet and white satin, having the appearance of embossing, was painted for her by Miss Louise Brudic, of Syracuse. Miss Cora Tanner, who recently appeared in "Odette," at the Park Theater, Brooklyn, had two painted dresses which attracted attention. One was a train dress, made up with lace, of blue satin, on which were painted scarlet poppies, golden rod, cat-tails and wild leaves that covered the entire front. The second dress was a pink surah satin with painted panels, on which were one large bunch of peonies, the bough of an old tree, and two large bluebirds. They were painted by Miss Georgia Lamson, of Brooklyn. Miss Rosa Keene, who played Dora in the "Planter's Wife," had a black velvet dress painted in the same manner by Miss Lamson. Miss Laura Don has worn several stage dresses painted by herself in water colors. One was painted on the back of the waist, and the other on the lower part of the skirt. Most painted dresses, however, have been done in oil, as water colors have been found to fade. Artists claim that the embroidery work lacks accuracy both of form and color, and is altogether inadequate to give the delicate tints, the proper shades, or the finely turned curves of vines and tendrils.

One of the opera companies playing "Patience" had a set of costumes painted by Vallier. Miss Leonora Bradley, of the Robson and Crane troupe, appeared in Brooklyn recently with a notable painted dress. It was a black satin train, with shirred back, square-cut waist, and lace sleeves. The ornaments painted on the skirt by Miss Fanny Clare, of Brooklyn, were red lilies, red and yellow wild flowers, butterflies and birds. Under the brilliant light of the theater the effect was very striking. Miss Rose Coghlan and Miss Emily Rigl have a variety of painted dresses in their wardrobes. Miss Sadie Bigelow, of Robson and Crane's troupe, has worn a yellow satin dress painted with scarlet lilies, roses and morning-glories by Miss Fanny Clare, of Brooklyn. Miss Lilian Vane has worn a painted white satin dress. Miss Belle Melleville, who is now playing in the "Shan Rhue," has some dresses delicately painted by Miss Amy Stockton, of Brooklyn.

Among the artists Mr. Hicks has painted a dress for his wife, which she wore at the Sorosis reception this winter. Mr. Harry Fenn has painted several dresses for his daughter. Miss Griswold painted for herself a princess train party dress, with panels in place of overskirt. On the panels were painted blackberry vines shaded in autumn tones. There was recently on exhibition at the rooms of a theatrical modiste in Fifth avenue near Seventeenth street, an elegant painted evening costume. The corsage was of ruby Lyons silk velvet, decollete, pointed back and front. The neck and sleeves were trimmed with antique lace representing roses, and buds hand-painted in delicate tints. The skirt was of navy satin Duchesse, a narrow puffing of the velvet showing out from underneath the skirt, with full ruching of lace to match neck and sleeves. The panel on the right side was painted to correspond with the rest of the dress. Two paniers, one falling over the other from right to left, were edged with painted lace and fastened to the center of the train with loops and ends caught with silver buckles. At the Arion ball this year a lady wore a dress, the painting alone on which was said to have cost $2,000.

Bunthorne's New Dress.

From the London World.

Have you seen a picture of Beau Brummell or the first quadrille party at Almack's? If not you may see a faint reproduction in Mr. Oscar Wilde's toilet. An open-work embroidered shirt, showing black silk lining, a large yellow silk handkerchief thrust into the breast of the coat and a high stock of the past ages—such was the fact, a few days ago, at a London dinner. And the rest of the costume was quite in keeping with the coat; so no doubt we shall find the æsthetic young men of the period going in for very tight continuations instead of those lately patronized, which, by their width, seemed to ape Lady Harberton's dual garment.

PUPILS' PANGS.

Something More About Suffering in the Public Schools.

Children Who Complain of Aching Backs—A Child's Experience in the Domain of Botany.

The article recently published in the POST-DISPATCH, concerning the physical tortures endured by children in the public schools, has served to call the attention of parents generally to the dangers that beset little ones who are placed at the mercy of a cruel and iron-clad course of study, planned apparently to fit the physical and mental robustness of the average adult, rather than the weak body and equally weak mind of the average infant. A lady writing to this paper, the other day, said the teachers in the Stoddard School compelled children to walk upon their toes in croosing the rooms, lest the click of their heels might prove disastrous to the ears of the instructress, and the same writer also insisted that the tack and toe-nail feature of the existing system of education was in vogue at the Stoddard and was rigorously adhered to. Supt. Long, some time ago, in speaking to a POST-DISPATCH reporter said he had expressly forbidden the exclusive use of the toes in walking during class hours, and he has also declared that he was not in favor of keeping children toeing a mark during recitations. The Superintendent's state mentand that of the lady correspondent already referred to go to show, as was before explained in these columns, that not only has Mr. Long grafted upon the present school, but that individual teachers, following his illustrious example, are trying to work in pet schemes of their own, and that the children are mere shuttlecocks batted this way and that at the whim and pleasure of their instructors. It is bad enough to try to teach them too much, and to cramp them into health-destroying positions in doing so, but to add a variety of methods of instruction to the variety of studies is something that should not be tolerated, as it can only increase the confusion that now pervades the system.

A gentleman who lives in the West End, and has two boys going to school, told a reporter, yesterday, that the little fellows who are in the lower grades not only make very slow progress in their studies, but come home every night complaining of pains in their backs, which they attribute to being compelled by the teachers to stand too long in line at recitations. The fact is, probably, that the pains are due to the manner in which they sit at their desks while writing. This was fully explained in last Friday's POST-DISPATCH by a prominent physician, who showed that the oblique position in which slates and copy-books are held by children at school induced curvatures of the spine, nervousness and short-sightedness. Teachers say children cannot obtain the beautiful slant and make the elegant flourishes that the Spencerian style of penmanship calls for if they hold their slates or copy-books in any other position than the oblique, which compels them to keep their right sides against the desk and to bend over the desks so that the vertebrae are crushed together and the eyes brought close to the surface of their work. The children hold the slate in front of them when drawing, but they must not only hold the paper differently when writing, but the position of the pen or pencil must be different,

THE WHOLE SYSTEM

seeming to be put together especially with a view to cramping as many members and muscles of the body as possible. Enough, however, has been said on this point. The physician interviewed last Friday said the system was radically and criminally wrong as far as the physical hardships it imposed upon pupils were concerned, and there, it is to be presumed, from the general appearance of things, the matter must rest. Public complaint doesn't seem to make much difference to the School Board or the Superintendent of the Schools. They prefer to have all complaints made in star-chamber style, so that the public will never know anything about them, and so that opportunity will be afforded to tell parents that they must not believe what the children say. This has always been the rule with regard to the complaints of school children. Just as soon as a little one comes home crying and says the teacher has done something harsh or cruel and the parent goes to the school-room, the inevitable explanation is that the child has lied. "Would you believe your child before you would me?" the teacher asks, and notwithstanding the boast is made that moral principles and the beauties of all the virtues are constantly drilled into the youthful mind, the parent is absolutely required to look upon his or her offspring as a monster of untruth base enough to conspire against everything and everybody in and about the schools, and whose only mission in life is to pull down society and all its grandest safeguards. But a great many parents do believe their children and for that reason the course taken by POST-DISPATCH in expressing the abuses that abound in the public school system is widely and

and after a while, it is to be hoped, the Superintendent or the School Board will begin to pay some attention to them.

Indeed, if all reports are true Superintendent Long or somebody else in authority is about to lessen the burden imposed upon babies compelled to grapple with trigonometrical formulas and scientific technicalities. It is hinted that such extraordinary expressions as "axis of symmetry" and "tangential union of lines" will be retired from the first and second grade classes. This will be a blessing of the most acceptable kind to the now suffering little folks, who have no more idea of what they are talking about when using these phrases than they have of the meaning of Nirvana. Apropos of this subject a teacher has sent the following to the principal of one of the school by an assistant, the names being eliminated for obvious reasons:

* * * "Don't you think the reporters of the POST-DISPATCH out to have this on the success of teaching technical terms to a 7-year-old child? Told the children about petals—stamens & pistol on Wed., & yesterday from the real flowers, so this morning pointed to the stamens—pulled one out & asked what they were called, when one little fellow cried 'guns.' He remembered the shooting part." * * * of the misdirected enterprise of the present Superintendent of the Schools is sufficient alone to condemn his entire system. He says in one of the paragraphs preceding the course of study mapped out for the children:

"While there is necessarily much difference in the amount of work performed by different classes in a given time, the quality of work done should be uniform, and there should be uniformity in the degree of progress made in the various branches required. Classes must not be allowed to advance in one subject while they are not up to the work required in other subjects."

This charming declaration of dependence on Mr. Long's whims is found on page 225 of the School Board Report for 1880. It means just this, that the Superintendent lays out a certain quantity of work in each branch for each quarter of the scholastic year and the child must get all this into his head, or its effort doesn't count. It won't do for a boy to be bright in arithmetic, reading and writing if he cannot compass the sesquipedalian monstrosities of drawing; and a little girl may just as well spend the time at her home with her dolls and dishes as go to school if she can pick up drawing and all the other useful and ornamental branches except arithmetic. There are no short cuts to perfection in this system; it is a regular steeplechase course of study from beginning to end, and the child who enters the race is obliged to take the elementary hurdles and the ornate ditches of learning and keep on until it gets its spine twisted out of shape or drops into a trigonometrical moat and is fished out a hopeless case of brain fever. Girls, who, according to expert evidence on the subject, are not able to master arithmetic as well or rapidly as boys, are compelled to study in the same classes with boys, and, as a usual thing, find it extremely difficult to KEEP UP THEIR AVERAGES.

Parents often find their children at the same reading lesson for months and when they ask the teacher for an explanation the ridiculous explanation is made that although the little one can read well enough and write well enough and probably cipher as well as could be desired even by Superintendent Long or Mr. Foster, who is the arithmetic fiend of the system, it has failed to catch on to the full practical meaning of Miss Locke's "axis of symmetry" or reached the tender depths of the same lady's "tangential union of lines." The whole idea of the pile-driving theory on which Mr. Long has built his course of study is as ridiculous as the attempt would be to try to erect a six-story hotel on a piece of ground scarcely big enough to be esteemed a respectable site for a post-hole, or the hope of putting up a magnificent Exposition structure if the total subscriptions taken up in the city had not exceeded fifteen cents. The six-year-old, who had only the three R's to contend with a few years ago on entering school, is now compelled to study nine separate and distinct branches, ranging from the A-B-abs to the very threshold of differential and integral calculus, and after being at school two years, if it survives that long, three more branches are added. Think of the tiny toddler going to school with a basketful of books and its little head full of bumps acquired in knocking hard at the doors of so many different studies. Think of it! Round-shouldered, weak-backed, nervous and with a pair of No. 1 glasses a-straddle its little nose, at the very outset of its scholarly career, and then picture to yourself, if you can, what must look like, should its physical and mental constitutions prove strong enough to resist the destroying influence of the school system, when it stands on the stage ready to receive its diploma from the principal of the High School. If a six or seven-year-old girl is made to look like Methuselah's grandmother after a few months' siege of this kind of education, a Memphian mammy that dates back to Zoroaster's time must be a laughing, rosy-cheeked babe in swaddling clothes compared with the antiquity and debility that will be combined in the girl graduate of sweet sixteen that the St. Louis schools turn out after this.

FAT ACTRESSES.

A Reaction Against the Slim Sarah Style of Beauty.

From the New York Morning Journal.

The announcement that Sarah Bernhardt is growing fat has thrown the theatrical world into a ferment of excitement. It is well-known that actresses all over the world have been carefully following the footsteps of Bernhardt. She was the fashion. All our leading ladies began to take anti-fat when they heard that Bernhardt weighed only ninety pounds, and those who were thin already went into tight lacing.

But there were some of them who could not succeed in pulling themselves down in weight. Miss Fanny Davenport was the one who had the courage to rebel against the servile imitation of the French actress. She refused either to take turpentine baths, as recommended by her physician, or to go into the Banting system. She gloried in her avoirdupois and defied the fashion. Her Camille was a stroke of success. Some critics pointed out to her that a 250-pound Camille would be an incongruity, and that the ravages of consumption on such a herculean frame would rather partake of the nature of burlesque. Miss Davenport answered triumphantly that her Camille would not die of consumption, but of dropsy.

This defiance of the conventional made Miss Davenport many enthusiastic friends and admirers, and it endeared her to many a lady in the profession who could not get her weight below 180 pounds. Miss Ada Gray, who is playing Mme. Vine and Lady Isabel in "East Lynne," at 220 pounds, in the provinces, wrote a most affectionate letter to Miss Davenport, acknowledging her as the champion of a down-trodden sisterhood, and saying that "in spite of the world, fat would conquer."

It was soon after this that Miss Gray put herself up as the prize at a hog-guessing somewhere in the west. That is to say, the system followed was similar to a hog-guessing, and proved very successful. Somebody had been advertising herself in opposition to Miss Gray as the handsomest woman on the stage. It was Agness Herndon, who tips the beam at 209 pounds, and is the heroine of a farce called "Only a Farmer's Daughter." Miss Gray advertised in large letters of her own bills, "Not the Handsomest, but the Fattest," and in a country where hog-raising and fattening for market is the principal industry, this was considered a great stroke of business, and made Herndon pale with envy. It was then that one of Miss Gray's most enthusiastic admirers suggested she should be put up to be guessed at, and that the winner should be given a Sir Francis Levison kiss. Sir Francis is the villain of the play whom the portly Lady Isabel adores. The raffle was a great success, and it unquestionably made Sarah Bernhardt unpopular in the West. The papers began talking of her in most contemptuous tones and sent Bernhardt marked copies in Paris. This, it seems, is the real reason of Bernhardt growing fatter. As she contemplates another American tour to recoup her losses in France, she realizes at last that to come here slim again would be ruinous, and so she has taken to a diet of fat roast pork and cod-liver oil.

There are others who feel happy at the noble war which Fanny Davenport and Ada Gray have waged. The massive Augusta Roche, who plays the Fairy Queen in "Iolanthe" at the Fifth Avenue Theater, has demanded $20 more salary a week since she read in the Journal about Sarah Bernhardt growing fat. Mary Johnson, of the same company, who plays Iolanthe, has bought several boxes of pate de foie gras in the belief that they will add to her size, and she is going to drink nothing but Dublin stout.

Miss Fanny Edwards, late of the D'Oyly Carte troupe, was a two-hundred pounder. She was much surprised at not being appreciated here, but she went away much pleased at the new notion that had set in, and sent her congratulations, before leaving, to Miss Rose Coghlan, who, within the past two years has set her face against the Bernhardt style, and has hired the smallest "flat" in the city, so as to take as little exercise as possible, and fit herself by degrees for the proper build of a tragedienne, as she contemplates starring next season in legitimate heavy parts.

Little things like Effie Ellsler, Sara Jewett, Agnes Booth and Ada Dyas have been thrown into consternation since they heard of the decision of Bernhardt to grow fatter. Young Miss Booth and frisky Miss Dyas say they cannot afford to fatten up, and Sara Jewett, who writes poetry, would be nothing other than ethereal under any circumstances.

There are some who think to play a love part at heavy weights is all wrong. But there are others who prefer it. Bernhardt's love scenes were always unreal, because it looked like romance in a skeleton; and the opinion of Steele Mackaye, the apostle of the Delsarte system, is, that good, healthy love cannot exist without bone, blood and fibre, not to say some flesh.

The new school is making rapid progress, and Turkish baths have been discarded by actresses as a thing of the past.

EYES VERSUS LIPS.

My lady's lips, so curved, so soft,
Have dealt to me a cruel "No;"
Now shall I, thus denied and scoffed,
From out her beauteous presence go?
Not so—proud lips, your lovely scorn
Within my breast shall plant no thorn,
Till deep I've gazed 'neath lashes black
Which hide her wondrous eyes from me,
And in response there flashes back
A glance, which shall my answer be.
Curved bows are lips whence arrows fly
To wound, to rend, mayhap to slay;
Deep wells are eyes where truth doth lie,
They will to me her heart betray.
Dark, tender eyes, your light denies
The proud lip's curve. Ah, rapture lies
Within those pure, clear depths for me,
Nor snowy lid, nor jetty lash
Can longer hide the flow and flash
Of Love's tide welling full and free,
Red lips, to haughty mocking lent,
Kisses shall be your punishment.

GODFREY'S PENANCE.

When young Godfrey Denyer repudiated his signature to a check for a large amount, drawn in favor of his friend, Capt. Wrake, he did not for a moment anticipate the serious consequences which ensued. His object was simply to gain time to arrange matters with the Captain, for the truth was that he had not the money to meet his draft. He was so extremely inexperienced and unbusinesslike that he did not imagine for an instant that his bankers had any cause of complaint in the matter. He thought they would simply return the check to Capt. Wrake's agents, with an intimation that there was an informality in it. And he was so staggered and horrified by the amount of the check that he eagerly adopted the suggestion of the clerk who waited upon him from the bank, that the signature was a forgery, by way of temporarily extricating himself from embarrassment. To an ordinary observer there certainly seemed something wrong about the signature; but Godfrey Denyer, bearing in mind the state he was in when he wrote the check, was not surprised that his handwriting should have been eccentric. The transaction took place at a supper-party at Capt. Wrake's rooms a few nights previously, on which occasion young Denyer dimly recollected having played recklessly at cards for high stakes; but as to what he had lost, and even how he had found his way home afterwards, his memory was a perfect blank.

Godfrey Denyer was a very foolish young man. He was, in fact, one of those vain, silly, weak-minded youths whose chief ambition is to lead the life of a fast man about town. Unfortunately, he had no near relations to interfere with his taste and pursuits, while a small fortune which he had inherited on attaining his majority enabled him for a brief period to indulge in every folly and extravagance. But he was not naturally either vicious or profligate, though he aspired to be taken to be so; and, consequently, the idea of having incurred a debt of honor which he was unable to pay filled him with dismay. When the bank clerk had left, taking the fatal check away, Godfrey Denyer at once set forth to seek Capt. Wrake, feeling deeply distressed and humiliated, but by no means conscious of the heinousness of the lie he had told.

Capt. Wrake was not to be found, either at his chambers or at his club, and, after rushing about with feverish anxiety to various places in search of him, young Denyer returned to his own rooms tired and disheartened. A hansom-cab was at the door, and, as he entered, he ran against a rather pompous elderly gentlemen, who at once accosted him:

"Mr. Denyer, I believe?"

"Yes," replied Godfrey.

"I must ask you to be good enough to come with me at once," replied the gentleman, whose tone and manner were unpleasantly peremptory. "I am Mr. Grantly, the solicitor for Messrs. X. & Co., your bankers."

"What for? What do you want with me?" demanded Godfrey uneasily as Mr. Grantly led the way to the cab.

"Jump in, I will explain as we go along. I shan't detain you many minutes," said the solicitor, taking him by the arm.

Young Denyer entered the cab and Mr. Grantly got in after him, having first given a brief direction to the driver. As they rattled over the stones the solicitor briefly explained that he was going to apply for a warrant against Capt. Wrake in connection with the check, as the bank had determined to prosecute.

"Prosecute! What for?" exclaimed Godfrey Denyer, started out of his senses.

"Forgery. It was a most impudent attempt," said Mr. Grantly, curtly.

"But—but Capt. Wrake is a friend of mine," faltered young Denyer. "Everything can be explained."

"He will have an opportunity of explaining," said the solicitor, in rather an ironical tone. "I'm sorry to hear he is a friend of yours. I am afraid you have been keeping bad company, young man."

Godfrey Denyer was too agitated and confused to continue the conservation. He was by any means clear as to the purpose of this visit to the police court. The ominous words, "prosecute" and "forgery," were ringing in his ears, but he was too bewildered to realize their significance, and he felt less apprehensive on Capt. Wrake's account than on his own. He had a vague suspicion that he had somehow made himself amenable to the law in connection with this wretched check, and suspected that the errand on which they were bound had an unpleasant personal bearing.

His uneasy meditation lasted until they reached their destination, and in a dazed state of mind he obeyed Mr. Grantly's request that he would follow him. What passed at the police court happened so quickly that he hardly knew what he was doing. To add to his agitation and nervousness, Mr. Grantly's manner was very overbearing, and, being a weak-minded lad, he helplessly did what he was told, without reflecting. He was sworn, and again confronted with the signature of the check. For the life of him he could not summon up courage to retract or qualify his original statement, and, as a monosyllable was all that was required by way of answer, he found it easier to say "no" to the question put to him than to enter into an explanation. It was not until he found himself alone again, disconsolately wending his way back to his chambers, that it began to dawn upon him how fatally he had committed himself, and how grave a wrong he had done to Capt. Wrake.

Words would not describe his bitter remorse and mental anguish when he reflected that by a false statement, repeated upon oath, he had put the law in motion against an innocent man. He could not even salve his conscience with the reflection that he remembered nothing of the transaction, for he had complete faith in Capt. Wrake's integrity, and firmly believed that he had voluntarily signed the check for money justly due from him. The worst feature in the case was, that he must either deliberately perjure himself again, or render himself liable to punishment for what he had already done. In this predicament his moral cowardice naturally suggested to him to seek safety in flight. He felt that, in leaving Capt. Wrake to his fate, he would be committing a despicable act, which would aggravate his sin; but, on the other hand, he vaguely hoped that his absence would render the prosecution abortive. Mr. Grantly had laid such stress upon the necessity of his holding himself in readiness to give evidence in support of the charge as soon as Capt. Wrake should be apprehended, that he had some ground for his belief.

While his mind was wavering between this ignoble purpose and the manly course of avowing his deceit an incident happened which afforded him an excuse for adopting the less compromising alternative. In the afternoon he received a visit from a lady who announced that she was Capt. Wrake's wife. She was young and pretty, but shabbily dressed, with a careworn look upon her pale face. Godfrey Denyer was the more startled at beholding her because, like most of the Captain's friends, he was unaware that he was married. He knew Capt. Wrake as a man of pleasure, a gambler and profligate, and in the poor wife's pinched features and threadbare attire it was easy to read a tale of suffering and neglect. But she had come, nevertheless, to plead for her husband, who, it appeared, had already been arrested; and the sight of her distress and her pitiful allusion to her young family touched Godfrey Denyer's heart and aroused his better nature.

"What can I do for you?" he said, summoning up all his fortitude. "Shall I go at once to the police and acknowledge the signature?"

"My lawyer says it would be useless, as you have already denied it under oath," sobbed the poor lady. "But if you would be merciful and not give evidence against my poor husband—"

"I will not. I will leave London at once," he interrupted, eagerly, with a strange feeling of relief.

"Heaven bless you!" cried his friend's wife, impulsively seizing his hand and kissing it.

But Godfrey Denver hastily drew his hand away, for the spot she had kissed seemed to burn like fire. A tingling sensation of shame and unworthiness took possession of him, so that he fairly fled from the room. When Mrs. Wrake had left he lost no time in making preparations for his departure. Having packed up a portmanteau—leaving the bulk of his effects to the mercy of the landlady—he went trembling to the bank and drew out the balance which stood to his credit. The same night he reached Liverpool, and next morning sailed for New York.

Godfrey Denyer remained in America more than five years, and owing to one of those singular chances which read like romance and which usually happen to unworthy persons, he was able to lay the foundation to a large fortune. An American fellow-passenger on the voyage out took a great fancy to him and offered him employment in his business. Godfrey Denyer at once entered upon a prosperous career, and developed an unexpected capacity for his new duties. He not only gained the confidence of his employer, but also his affectionate regards, so that he was afforded opportunities for advancement which rarely fall to the lot of a young man.

But he was no longer the vain, foolish lad he used to be before he left England. A great change had come over him, which dated from the day when, shortly after his arrival in America, he learned that Capt. Wrake had been found guilty of the charge of forgery and sentenced to a long term of penal servitude. Godfrey Denyer's absence had availed no more than the prisoner's eager protestations of innocence to avert an adverse verdict, for independent persons had sworn to their belief that the signature to the check was not in the handwriting of the supposed drawer. The news gave Godfrey a severe and painful shock, and had a sobering effect upon his character. He conceived it to be his duty at least to provide for the necessities of the poor woman and innocent children whom he had rendered miserable. He had not the courage to return to England and clear Capt. Wrake's reputation, but short of that he resolved to make every atonement in his power. With this object he devoted himself assiduously to business, regularly transmitting the larger portion of his earnings to a trustworthy agent, who applied the money for Mrs. Wrake's benefit. The poor lady frequently blessed her unknown benefactor, but Godfrey Denyer never dared to disclose his identity, lest the wife of the man he had so cruelly wronged should spurn his gifts, and thus deprive him of the small consolation he derived from helping her.

At length he was informed that Capt. Wrake would shortly be set at liberty, and he then resolved to carry into execution a plan which had been slowly forming in his mind for years past. In spite of the pecuniary sacrifices he had made, he felt that he had by no means atoned for his sin. It was not a question of money, for he was prepared to continue his benefactions, and to provide Capt. Wrake with funds to make a fresh start in life, if he would accept any favor of him. But his chief purpose was to return to England, and to place himself unreservedly in Captain Wrake's hands. If the Captain would accept no apology or compensation, and insisted upon his publicly acknowledging his baseness, Godfrey Denyer was determined to do so, regardless of the consequences.

This resolution had cost him a severe struggle with his moral cowardice, but at length he succeeded in summoning up the necessary fortitude for his self-imposed penance. If he secretly hoped that Capt. Wrake would be satisfied with some smaller sacrifice, he was nevertheless perfectly sincere in his purpose. He returned to England, looking prematurely aged, with streaks of gray in his hair, though he was barely 30. But his bearing was calm and resolute, and a shrewd observer would have guessed at once that he had suffered some great trouble, which had darkened his young life.

On the day when Capt. Wrake was released from prison Godfrey Denyer sent to him a request that he would grant him an interview at an inn near the gates of the jail. He felt deeply agitated at the prospect of finding himself face to face with the man who must have been cursing him bitterly for years, and who would now be the arbiter of his fate; but his firmness did not desert him, and, when Capt. Wrake appeared, his purpose never wavered.

To his amazement the Captain hung his head and accepted his outstretched hand without hesitation, but in a very humble manner. Godfrey could scarcely believe his senses, and doubted at first whether he was really his former friend who stood before him. It was indeed he, however; though he, too, had aged and was much changed in appearance. For a moment neither spoke, and then suddenly the Captain burst into tears and said in a choked voice:

"Denyer, don't say a word. I can't bear it. I—I guess now who has been the savior of my poor wife and children. What am I to say to your noble conduct? You first stand my friend by not appearing against me at the trial, so as to give a poor devil a chance; and then—you act as guardian angel to those I have so cruelly wronged. And you, of all others, are the person from whom I had the least right to expect a kindness."

"Why?" demanded Denyer, hoarsely, with a wild throbbing at his heart.

"Why! How can you ask! You know my offense," said the Captain, averting his face."

"Do you mean—do you mean that you were really guilty?" cried Denver, with a blessed sense of a load being suddenly lifted from his mind.

"God forgive me, yes! I was desperate; your helplessness tempted me, and—and—" the Captain paused and hung his head again, while Godfrey Denyer involuntarily gave a long drawn sigh of intense relief.

Parnell and Forster.

London Correspondent of the New York Sun.

In physique the two men are absolutely different. Forster has the heavy build of an English navy; Parnell the thin, apparently delicate, but strongly nervous organization of an American. Indeed, in looks and in character Parnell appears to me a singular complete type of the highest American organization. He has a pale but perfectly clear complexion. The delicate features are "carved, not moulded." His thin frame conceals nerves of steel. So, also, in character and purpose. If Parnell has any vanity nobody has ever been able to discover it. As I have before written, popular demonstration of a tumultuous magnificence that would stir the heart of an Emperor leaves him absolutely unmoved. In private, whether it come from interested flattery or the exuberance of affection, all allusions to himself seem to drive him off into deaf revery. He seems quite free from personal animosities; can listen to the most violent indictment unchanged, and when he passes out of the House appears to forget all about it. When Forster gets up to make his attack everybody can see the coarse pugilist waving his bludgeon with the zest and the avid passion of a carnivorous animal; but Parnell opposite—I have to speak somewhat fancifully in order to convey my impressions—appears, as 'twere, to dissolve into thin air and to become as invulnerable as a phantom from Shadow Land.
